The Written Language of Abraham, Moses and David

– A study of the pictographic roots and basic notions in the

André H. Roosma 1

D R A F T Working Document 2

(considerably extended and updated !)

What was the language of the Biblical patriarchs like Abraham, and what kind of script did they use? What script did God and Moses use, when writing the Torah – the great teaching to Israel? Which were the letters David employed to write down his wonderful Psalms?

This document is the result of a research project that is digging deep into the soil of history to uncover the earliest Biblical Hebrew language. For this research many Biblical Hebrew, Aramaic and some Arab words were linked to what appears to be the earliest pictographic script – in which probably several of the books of the First Testament of the Bible were originally written.

This research revealed that the earliest root of the old Semitic script and language is much older than supposed up to now, and that it was build up from 22 to 29 building blocks: basic notions and associated ‘sound bites’. The main 22 of these have been identified and described. They are reflected in the 22 main pictographic symbols of early West-Semitic, in active use till the time of David. Around that time it formed the basis for the Paleo-Hebrew and Phoenician script and via Phoenicia for almost all alphabet scripts in the world.

This document uses these symbols and their underlying notions and meanings to reconstruct likely original interpretation Aramaic and Arabic words and names. Insight into the identified notions appears to be a tremendous aid in the analysis and understanding of old Semitic texts and the etymology of Biblical Hebrew.

!– A study of the pictographic roots and basic notions underlying the earliest Biblical script

Introduction: the quest for the script of the earliest books of the Bible

To understand the earliest books of the Bible, we must understand the basics of the languages in which they were written. The scripts used provide an important entry to this understanding. One of those scripts is what is called the Hebrew square script. The alphabet of this script looks like this:

This was the script used In the Middle Ages to duplicate the manuscripts that have since served as our originals of the books of the First Testament. Many people today are somewhat familiar with it. Often it is alleged that this is the ‘Biblical Hebrew’ script in which the First Testament of the Bible was written originally. However, as most scholars are aware, this is not so. Languages and scripts have been in constant change and development. Only after the Babylonian exile (i.e. about 500 BC) the Jews adopted an early variant of the Hebrew square script from the Assyrians in Babylon (a Jewish name for the script is Ketav Ashuri). However, the majority of the First Testament is much older. Consequently, its writers must originally have used other scripts. We thus have to look further.

When we go further back in time in Israel, past 500 BC, we encounter the Paleo-Hebrew script, and very similar scripts (Phoenician, Moabite, etc.) in the neighboring countries. The alphabet of this looked about this way:

PaleoHebrew

The Paleo-Hebrew script was in use roughly between 1000 BC and 300 BC. With its sister-scripts, it emerged gradually (1100-900 BC; the timeframe in which the state of Israel and various neighboring states became institutionalized, and Biblically Shaul, David and Solomon/Shlomo can be placed) from a common ancestor. Various ancient Northwest Semitic inscriptions from Israel, Edom, Phoenicia, Moab, Syria, Ammon, and Philistea thus enlighten and sharpen our vision of the First Testament books at the time of the Kings in various ways. The geographical area we look at is the western part of the area that is known as being inhabited at that time by descendants of the Biblical patriarch Sem. Before about 1100 BC many of the languages in this area, were still largely as one, with at most some different local dialects, spread over the area. Populations then of course were a fraction of what they were later. Still further back all Semitic languages were still one. This single language – the (recon3 structed) common ancestor of all Semitic languages – has been given the name: Proto-Semitic.

Now back to scripts. The Paleo-Hebrew script developed from a script that was used in the WestSemitic area during the se in a very large area (ranging from current Syria to Egypt to the Sinai desert). Commonly, it is often referred to as Proto-Canaanite or Proto-Sinaitic script, but these denotations do not do justice to its geographical distribution. The common language in this area and era has been named West Semitic or Central Semitic. So, Proto-West-Semitic script or Proto-Central-Semitic script would be more proper choices for the name of this script. This is my somewhat normalized reconstruction of the most important graphemes of this script:

Proto-Semitic is a dead language, and largely a reconstruction, based on analysis of its descendants: the Semitic languages, and in part based on a number of archeological findings of text fragments.
Concerning the terms ‘Hebrew’ and ‘Proto-Semitic’: On the surface archeologists and linguists on the one hand and some religious teachers in Judaism on the other, seem to disagree concerning the history of the Hebrew language. Many Jewish religious leaders teach that Hebrew is very old – maybe even as old as mankind. ‘No’, say archeologists and linguists, ‘Hebrew proper does not extend further back than the first millennium BC. Before that, we talk about Canaanite, Central Semitic, West Semitic and Proto-Semitic, for an increasing number of Semitic languages were still as one when we go back in time over the second millennium BC and earlier.’
To me, all that is primarily a matter of names or convention: what we choose to call ‘Hebrew’. This Proto(West/Central)· put it in a Biblical timeframe: ‘Adam till David Hebrew’. It is this language and especially the associated script – the father of almost all alphabet scripts in the world –, that this document is all about. The variant of the early Semitic script in the area of Israel (archeologists and linguists speak geographically of Canaan) is also named (Proto-)Canaanite script, distinguishing it from e.g. (Proto-)Sinaitic to which it is highly similar, used in more southern area’s – till far down into Egypt. I do not make this distinction.

As I studied this script and many Semitic words and names formed with it, I discovered that this script is kind of pictographic in origin, and its pictographs appear to be related to basic notions or building blocks in the earliest root fabric of the Proto-(West-)Semitic language. Since this research shows that this script and/or the underlying basic notions are very old, I decided to use simply the term old Semitic script.
So, historically Israel used the following scripts:

The subjects of this document are these earliest building blocks of the Semitic languages (the WestSemitic branch in pa place, and this early pictographic script. My systematic research reveals that the roots of this script are very old (probably predating any other script!) and that in all likelihood underlying these languages and their grammar is a most comprehensive system of simple building blocks: some 22 to 29 basic notions and associated sounds (phonemes). Each of those building blocks is represented in the old West Semitic script by a picture of some object from simple everyday life at the edge of the subtropical desert: the hea tent pin, an arm with a hand, a rising sun, an eye, or a palm tree. Most words were originally formed from these basic notions as building blocks.

This basic set of notions as building blocks in word-formation really is unique. It is far more comprehensive than the s hieroglyphs or the Chinese characters. From this basic set of notions emerged a script that is the most unique writing system in the entire world. The fact that this script was written with a very limited number of smal read and learn.

Research in this area is relatively young. Most Semitic scripts of the first millennium BC have been identified and deciphered only relatively recently: mainly since the 18th century.4 The 20th and 21st centuries – especially the beginning and the end of the 20th – have been the main age of archeological findings from the second millennium BC; almost every decade new text fragments were discovered, and this development is continuing still. The old largely deciphered. However, the last centuries have seen the wildest theories on the development and nature of this script come and go, as highly speculative and biased theories were continuously challenged by older texts discovered in new archeological excavations.

Usually this script has been studied as predecessor of its successors, such as Phoenician and Paleo-Hebrew.

In the text-fragments found, archeologists and linguists have searched for recognizable words. They studied which symbols corresponded more or less with the later Phoenician and Paleo-Hebrew letter signs. As far as they looked at the pictures, they assumed à priori that of the pictured object only the first letter (in the sense of: sound) is relevant (the acrophonic principle) and that the meaning of this object plays no role whatsoever. From this prejudiced viewpoint they did not look at all to the coherence of the picture focus, with surprising results. It appears, that every symbol represents a notion, which we encounter in the meanings of the words composed with them.

The research as presented here in draft identified and uncovered most of these underlying notions, related to the original pictograms and sounds. The beauty of this language and especially about this script is its concreteness; it is not ‘up in the air’ but closely tied to everyday, concrete reality. The association of basic notions with sounds and a representing picture is a unique feature, which made it also a great source of progress, as that allowed it to develop into the first alphabet. Most other scripts and alphabets in the world emerged from it: not only the Paleo-Hebrew, Phoenician, Moabite, Aramaic, old-Arabic, Ge'ez and other alphabets within the Semitic language group, but also the Greek alphabet, as well as the Latin, the Cyrillic and still others. It has left an unparalleled mark on world history!

The Written Language of Abraham, Moses and David

Proto-Semitic: original language in the area of Sem

All around the Middle East archeological excavations have brought to light a number of texts and text fragments that were written in this old Semitic script, or in variants of it. These findings – up to today – date from the time period that runs from about 1900 (Wadi el-Hol inscriptions) until 1000 BC.
The script used in these discovered texts was largely common to a number of early Semitic languages (Semites are the descendants of Sem, that lived in the region reaching from current Iran and Iraq to Lebanon, Arabia and scientifically speaking (proto- is pre- or early-; as mentioned; the often used terms Canaanite or Sinaitic certainly are too narrow, since later Aramaic and Arabic scripts, and even the Ugaritic cuneiform script (developed around 1300 BC) appear to be descendants of this script; there are significant similarities with the Old South Arabian scripts as well).

A reconstruction of the genealogy of the most important Semitic languages (the development of the scripts came about along different lines)

As the diagram shows, the Proto-Semitic language[6] is the reconstructed forerunner of a.o. Akkadian, Ethiopian,[7] Ugaritic, Arabian, Aramaic, Hebrew, and Phoenician (though it is not certain that ethnically

[5] The name Sem: שם should perhaps be שׁם - Shem [pronounced much like Shame] (Hellenic influence may have caused the shift from sh to s; the Greek version is Σημ). Originally, this name probably referred to 'a water well' or 'source of water' – most essential there and then, or to a source of abundance, corresponding to the bles would be palm trees, or palm tree and water. Palm trees were very attractive because of their fruit and other materials derived from them. Spiritually, they were a symbol of the Tree of Life. So they were associated with wea glorious Name of God (there is a relationship to the Hebrew word for heaven as well). The Semites are the people of The Name, they belong to God – The Source of abundance. More on שׁם later in this document.

[6] Often the first split observed within the Semitic language family is a split between West-Semitic and EastSemitic, or be similar in the second millennium, but differing already from Akkadian, the major representative of EastSemitic. For sim go back further to the 3rd or 4th millennium BC.
A very good scientific analysis of these times and periods (the philogeny of the Semitic languages) is given in: Geoff K. Nicholls & Robin J. Ryder, 'Phylogenetic models for Semitic vocabulary', in: D. Conesa, A. Forte, A. Lopez-Quilez, F. Munoz (Eds.), Proceedings of the 26th International Workshop on Statistical Modelling, València, Spain, July 2011; ISBN 978 84 694 5129 8; especially Figure 2, showing that the origin of Hebrew & See also: Andrew Kitchen, Christopher Ehret, Shiferaw Assefa and Connie J. the Phoenicians were Semites). Apart from the archeological findings, also the similarities between these various Semitic languages form an important clue to discover more about this Proto-Semitic, though much remains speculative.8

Discovering more about the old Semitic script

The mentioned period of 1900 to 1000 BC covers about the Biblical period from Abraham until David or Solomon. This is a most relevant period for the Biblical text, since in this period a large part of the First or 'Old' Testament was written. So, in all likelihood, several books of the First Testament were written originally in this old script. It should therefore not come as a surprise that this script will provide a lot of clarity on these early Bible books and on the Bible in its entirety.

By studying the uncovered inscriptions, getting familiar with the culture there and then, and by transliterating early E identify some 23-29 basic notions – which appear to be the building blocks of the Proto-Semitic language. And we found \ of Proto-Semitic probably date back to the time of or shortly after creation. Originally, the symbols of the old Semitic script probably formed a pictographic/ideographic as well as phonemic representation of these basic notions or building blocks of the early Proto-Semitic language.

stood at the base of many alphabets, a.o. the Greek and Latin (from which also our western alphabet evolved).9

Around that time, at about 1000 BC (that's just after the transition from the bronze to the iron age), we observe the further division of this alphabet script into a number of different branches, such as Phoenician and Paleo-Hebrew (in Judaism this is called Ketav 'Ivri; a 'semi-vocal' script and not a pure consonant script as is sometimes taught; like Proto-Semitic it knew the three vowels: i [ee], u [oo] and a 10).

Paleo-Hebrew text-fragment from the Moabitic Mesha stele (about 840 BC)

This apparently arose around the time of King Solomon (Qeijafa ostracon inscription). In the beginning there was still much likeness between early Paleo-Hebrew and early Phoenician – (see e.g. the inscription on the sarcophagus of Ahiram 11). The Paleo-Hebrew was used at calculated to fall around the middle of the second millennium BC (+/- 400 years); this is quite significant, since Biblically this is the time of Moses and the early formation and expansion of the state of Israel!

Some scholars note: since the 8th or 9th century BC. I conclude that that is: since the time when the queen of Sheba' [probably: Ethiopia + southern part of the Arabian peninsula] visited Solomon adopting his culture and religion; but more likely the Semitic origins of the Ethiopian languages are even much older.

Speaking about relatedness: the old Celtic language shows remarkable similarities with the Phoenician (see e.g. Karel Jongeling, Comparing Welsh and Hebrew, CNWS / Leiden University, Leiden, 2000; ISBN: 978 90 5789 032 1; and: 'The Hebrew-Celtic connection', web-article, in which it is shown that Celtic is clearly derived from Phoenician). This creates a link between Proto-Indo-European (of which Celtic is normally regarded a branch) and Proto-Semitic.

Some see the line from the early Semitic script to the Greek and Latin scripts running via the Phoenician script. The Phoenicians as sea-faring nation of the time certainly contributed greatly to the propagation of this script via their extensive international trade.

Remarkably, the (cuneiform) script of a Semitic sister language, Ugaritic, precisely has specific signs for these three vowels.

Gesenius noted in his grammar (1.2 §24): “ו and ' are, as consonants, so weak, and approach so nearly to the corresponding vowels u and i, that under certain conditions they very readily merge into them.” A little further, he explains what he means by that ‘merge into them’: “It then merges in the homogeneous vowel, or more accurately it assumes its vowel-character (ו as u, ' as i), and is then contracted with the preceding vowel into one vowel, necessarily long,…”

The following transliteration into the Hebrew square script can be easily derived:

ארן ז פעל אתבעל בן אחרם מלך גבל לאחרם אבה כ שתה בעלם ואל מלך במלכם וסכנ בסנם ותמא מחנת

עלי גבל ו׳גל ארנ זן תחתסף חטר משפטה תהתפך כסא מלכה ונחת תברח על גבל והא ימח ספרז לפף שרל least till about the fourth century BC (a rather late variant we find a.o. in the Lachish letters of about 590 BC, and i know12). The Paleo Hebrew script remained in usage till the time of Christ for writing the glorious Name of God amidst later Hebrew square script or Greek script, as in the early editions of the Septuagint. That late ver which facsimiles of the remaining fragments are available at The Leo Levy Dead Sea Scroll Digital Archive. At the time of the Bar Kokhba revolt (132-136 AD), the Paleo Hebrew script experienced a renewed interest by th coins and other text fragments from that period, which have been discovered by archeologists in the last centuries.

A reconstruction of the development of various scripts from the earliest Semitic script

(The sub-titles are alternative terms used in literature; see e.g. the website of Proel or Wikipedia; The existence of what is called here the Northwest Semitic (or Archaic Phoenician) script is demonstrated by archeological findings, even that of a Central Semitic (or (Proto-) Canaanite) script is; so these scripts do not need a ‘Proto-’ prefix (as if they were reconstructions only). A common origin of the scripts in the Central Semitic branch and that in the South Semitic branch makes the existence of at least a (Proto-) West-Semitic script highly plausible.)

The current Hebrew square script is clearly of much more recent origin: the Jews (the 2.5 tribes southern kingdom of old Babylonian exile, under very strong influences from outside (in particular of the Aramaic of those days from that region – therefore, in Judaism they also speak of Assyrian script or Ketav Ashuri –, and the by then extensively Hellenistic Babylonian culture13). in the Babylonian and Assyrian empires is very well documented. Note that the Northern ten-tribes kingdom of Israel (in the New Testament and up to now also known as the Samaritans14), though by the Jews traditionally seen as less ‘pure’ in their religion as well as genetically, actually remained with a variant of the Paleo-Hebrew script and never went along in this Jewish Hellenizing step.
Many people think that the Akkadian cuneiform script was the oldest script, which ‘consequently’ predated pictographic scripts like the old Semitic script I am talking about here. However, the Akkadian cuneiform was c pictographic script where each sign represented a word or a syllable. Thus, the Akkadian script, too, was syllabic and ideographic rather than alphabetic in origin. No surprise that the oldest West-Semitic script was syllabic and ideographic in origin as well. And, by the way, according to C.J. Ball, the oldest Chinese script was related to this old Sumerian pictographic script as well.
Such a development from a pictographic script to a cuneiform script was repeated later in the development of the Ugariti

Word formation and the origin of the Semitic languages

A lot of what has been written about language and especially about Biblical Hebrew seems to assume that language is static and that the Hebrew at the time of Jesus was the same as the language at the time of Moses. It was not. Languages are in constant development. They have an origin. Vocabulary and grammar have developed over the ages. Even a few decades ago, nobody in the world knew what an ipad was or that a tablet was not only a slab suited for or bearing an inscription, a small booklet for notes, a compressed block of a solid material, a medical pill or a small table, but also a minicomputer.
What follows is not just a theory of the old West-Semitic script. In fact, it is a theory on the formation of the vocabulary of the Semitic languages. All over the world, vocabulary is formed mainly by a few simple principles. We see borrowing, imitation of sounds and shifts in meaning (like that of the tablet as mini-computer, from its likeness in form and partly in use – for writing/reading). But the most important and most frequent form of new word formation is by joining two or more already existing words or by adding a pre- or suffix to an existing word: agglutination.15
The rest of this document is in fact a test of the hypothesis that most words in the old West-Semitic that were not borrowings or onomatopoeia, were originally – in their original meaning – formed by this agglutination principle, from a very limited set of basic notions. Even pre- and suffixes and grammatical additions originated for a large part from this basic set of notions.
I stumbled upon this when I studied the Semitic vocabularies. Early on I discovered similar notions in words that had letters in common. When I saw the pictures of the old West-Semitic script, I saw pictures of objects representing these basic notions.
The natural sciences show that everything in creation is build up out of smaller building blocks. The same counts for language. We regularly form new words by combining two or more smaller words. Pictographic scripts do the same with their symbols. Some study of Japanese and Chinese once showed me that many characters are build up out of other, smaller characters (with fewer ‘strokes’).

Strikingly, Jesus directed Himself exclusively to Israel, not to any persons of other nations (Matthew 15: 24), and explicitly He did direct Himself to the Samaritans, even putting a Samaritan as an example to the Jews (Jehudim from Jehudah - Judah) (Luke 10; 17; John 4). Only one conclusion is possible: in Jesus’ vision the Samaritans were not heathen but part of Israel, just like the Jews; albeit that Yeshu‘ah (Jesus) Himself came from the tribe of Jehudah.

15

I use the term agglutination broadly here, including synthesis, compounding, pre- and suffixing.

The Written Language of Abraham, Moses and David

The basic notions underlying the Early Semitic languages

When studying old Semitic languages and the old Semitic script, one cannot avoid the observation that the characters represent objects of early everyday life. Many scholars have thought that these objects were chosen only to represent their first phoneme. My extensive research on this has demonstrated that this neglects the underlying notions – the building blocks in the basic fabric of the Proto-Semitic language. Each of the depicted objects represented one of the basic notions that served as the building blocks of the early Proto-Semitic language. The fact that this underlying structure and its notions were – as far as I know – not discovered earlier is partly due to the diversified and often inadequate theories on the objects represented by the old Semitic symbols and the limited eye of linguists for logical structure.

In order to find the basic notions underlying the early Semitic languages, we first have to de-mystify the old Semitic symbols. There is a plentitude of sources that associate meanings to the old Semitic symbols or to the Hebrew letters (often specifically to the square script letters!). Most of them are rooted in Jewish mysticism, which has its main roots in Babylon. This study takes explicit distance from that. We do not have to become inaugurated in Qabbalah or some other Jewish, Gnostic or mystic system in order to talk about the rather concrete notions represented by the original symbols or graphemes.

May the following scheme help to distinguish the above more clearly:

The earliest old Semitic graphemes are clearly pictographs, each picturing an object representing one of the basic notions as well as its associated phoneme (‘sound’). That object and its related notion can be objectively and scientifically researched and attested.
The matching of notions to graphemes (symbols) and to phonemes (sounds) has also been observed in Sumerian. Many of the notions and sounds that I will discuss here, correspond strongly to those in Sumerian.
And one of the good things is that the result greatly enhances our understanding of ancient writings from that region, including all the riches the Bible is all about.
In this version of this document (as from May 2012) here and there some relationships with other pictographic scripts, like old Chinese, will be given. Many script systems seem to have an ancient common origin, which is understandable from a Biblical viewpoint: from the time of Noah.
What I call here old Chinese in this context, is Jiaguwen – the script found on oracle-bones and turtle shells (mainly 14th – 11th century BC; possibly in part already older) and Dazhuan – on cast bronze vessels (mainly 11th – 8th century BC).16

A brief discussion of the most important basic notions & symbols
Below you will find a brief discussion of the 22+ most important basic notions, and the objects and symbols used to represent them.
Remarkable in the oldest drawings, is that the orientation of the symbols (the angle at which they are drawn) is obviously not fixed yet at that time (concretely this means that symbols sometimes appear 90o rotated, sometimes upside down or mirrored). Also completely different representations of the concerned object or notion not an abstract letter of an alphabet. The geographical area in which these signs were used is immense (covering an area many small variations, especially in the less frequent notions and their representing symbols. In addition some symbols/ sound, as it appears: e.g. the samekh, tsade, sin and zayin (compare Hebrew tsadeq and Aramaic zadeq for ‘righteousness’), the ’aleph and ‘ayin, the soft chet and the hei, the chet and the hard ‘ayin (/ghayin) and the teth and the tav. This makes reconstructing and interpreting old Semitic roots more cumbersome and increases the chance of small errors, but it can be done, as what follows will demonstrate.

Concerning the notions and their representing objects behind the symbols/letters: Of several symbols/letters the underly almost all old Semitic words in which the symbol originally appeared. This is for example the case with the aleph, beth, wav, yod and mem.

Some of the notions and objects were somewhat less clear, as e.g. that behind the tsade and samekh. However, as the research presented here will show, these can be reconstructed with great confidence. Ingredients for that reconstruction effort are: finding the common element in Hebrew, Aramaic, (Akkadian) and Arabic words containing that letter (especially: beginning with that letter), and studying the relevant culture of that time around the possibly depicted object and related notions. Other symbols, objects and the notions behind them can be verified in this way.

With each notion below I provide a picture of the early Paleo-Hebrew / Phoenician alphabet letter (of about 1000 BC) at the top left of the discussion. Below that I will give one or more examples of old Semitic symbols representing the notion that stood at the basis of the Paleo-Hebrew / Phoenician letter. Sometimes I will discuss a link with the corresponding square script letters.17 Frequently I may combine letters with other letters, some of which may only be discussed further on, to form words. With words I sometimes supply the Strong code in [blue between square brackets].

The later Hebrew square script developed from or under strong influence of (western/ Imperial) Aramaic. Yet I will compare the letter shapes to their old Semitic ‘ancestors’.

The Written Language of Abraham, Moses and David

’A / ’al / ’alpu / ’alp / ’alpa / ’aleph / ’alluph

old:

The Paleo-Hebrew ’aleph is derived from a picture of the head of an ancient ox or auroch. A first basic notion in early old Semitic language was that of being a ‘first’ or ‘most prominent’ among others or of being unique. The object representing this notion is the head of an ox: ’aleph (al, alpa), very simply drawn (sometimes an eye was additionally drawn in). In those days the ox was one of the most prominent and strongest animals among the cattle (one of the meanings of the Akkadian ’alpu was head of the cattle - The Assyrian Dictionary, Part I, p.364). So that is why this notion of being the first, the powerful one, or the one most valuable, was associated with the ox. In most words written with an aleph we recognize the notion of a ‘powerful’ or ‘first/primary’ (as compared to others). The symbol may also represent the objec When, in those days of old, one encountered one of those huge aurochs (the wild ox with a shoulder height of up to 2 meters! This was also the animal from which our domestic cows were bred), one’s breath stopped in one’s throat. It may well be that therefore, the associated sound or phoneme of the

- ’a is the glottal stop (also known as hamza and transliterated as ’), often in combination with something close to our vowel a.

In Paleo-Hebrew this symbol later got somewhat styled and simplified to three strokes. From this evolved (by rotation) the Greek capital letter alpha A and from that our Latin capital A (the lower case letters from the P-S original). Strange enough the shape can hardly be recognized anymore in t

As prefix the ’aleph sign is the first person (singular): ‘I’.

In distinction to the elementary notion (language building block) and symbol, the full word ’aleph - אלף can be interpre notion of the domestication of the wild ox. A well-trained strong animal, like an ox, was most useful

[504] it can mean those tamed oxen or cattle itself, or a family in farming. Pronounced as ’eleph - אֶלֶף as following a leader in a similar way. Pronounced ’alph - 502אַלַף]] it is the verb to learn, to be trained or trainable (docile), or causatively to teach, to train. (Apparently, in early Arabic it has also been seen as ‘the first Leader’s mouth’ in the sense of not only teaching but also relational intimacy). For quite some time the auroch or wild ox was the strongest animal in nature. The domesticated ox was the prime among the cattle. With some training, one easily becomes the ‘first’ or a leader oneself. How the [505] with the number 1000 came into exisrelationship of the same root pronounced as ’eleph - אֶלֶף

tence is not 100% clear to me yet. Theories range from an origin via one (thousand) (i.e. numerically), or via an ’aleph - ‘first one’ becoming a leader over 1000 oxen/people/soldiers, or 1000 people being joined in a school, and the leader therefore becoming a ‘leader over 1000’ – an ’eleph. Typically ‘chicken and egg’ – hard to find out which came first. I wonder if there is a relationship with the elephant (certainly a ‘first’ or leader in the animal kingdom); Isaac E. Mozeson readily confirms this of course.

As word

- ’aleph appears amongst others in Psalm 144: 14 :

When our oxen (’allupheinu) are well laden; When there is no breaking in, and no going forth,

And no outcry in our streets:

And the following Bible text, from Zakhar-Yahu (Zachariah) 9:

6 And a bastard shall dwell in Ashdod, and I will cut off the pride of the Philistines.

7 And I will take away his bloods out of his mouth, and his idolatries from between his teeth.

But the remnant, even he, shall be for our God. And he shall be as a first one (ke-’alluph) in Judah, and Ekron like a Jebusite.

Besides the aspects mentioned, there is still another way in which the ox was a ‘first’ or ‘most important’, and that wa old the sacrificing of oxen was; we encounter it early in the history of mankind, as described in Genesis as well as in stories and rites of other peoples. It is known that the Chinese had a very old imperial ritual of bull-sacrifice to the God of gods, Shang Di (some relate this name to the Hebrew title

’El Shaddai). Animal sacrifice was an important ritual for it symbolized that man had become mortal by his rebellion against God, and in need of reconciliation, and tat God accepted a substitution death.

It was also a way to feast and eat abundantly together, celebrating God’s goodness. By giving the first or best of everything to Him and use it for that common celebration, we humans keep our priorities straight while at the same time building our essential attachments.

!– A study of the pictographic roots and basic notions underlying the earliest Biblical script

Ba / baytu / beth

old:

variant:

The second notion is that of being ‘inside or part of something’ – like we can be inside a house or in our body. It was symbolized by a drawing of the layout of a small Bedouin tent, a simple house or a vase or other receptacle or container: beth (baytu, beith). Its associated phoneme is b. In words the beth often represents a tent, house, body (cf. our expression: ‘our earthly tent’), or some other container (vase, box, etc.). As prefix the beth stands for ‘in’ or ‘inside’ as well – in full accordance with the basic notion, represented by the beth as being inside a container of some sort. (And as it still seems to do even in English, as some say, noting that the prefix be- represents ‘in’ in words like before – in the fore, behind – in the hind, beside – in/ at the side, beyond - in the yonder.)

The sound associated with the
- ba/beth is the hard b, later supplemented by the soft bh (of which the pronunciation approaches that of our v), possibly associated with the sounds around a possibly flapping tent in the wind. These – b and bh respectively – I also use as transliterations of this letter into our Latin script.

In Paleo-Hebrew this sign was changed to make it easier to write by hand. In this (again rotated) our lowercase b and some of the Greek beta B can be recognized. In the square script ב still something of the original house or tent is still recognizable as well.

Biblically, the beith or house is not just the physical dwelling place, but includes any object or notion that anything can be contained in or part of, and those concepts we associate with the ‘home’, and ‘(extended) family’, ‘family line/tree’ or ‘clan’ we are part of.19 We find all these meanings of beith as word among others in the following text, from Genesis 12:

1 And YaHUaH had said to Abram, Go out of your country, and from your kindred, and from your father's house (beith) into a land that I will show you.

In Old Chinese pictographs (radical 22) is a symbol for a box or for the verb to hide.

Ga / gam / gamlu / gimel

The third notion, gam / gamlu / gimel, with phoneme the hard g (as in English gone or green), is that of going or transportation. This notion and graphic has already been observed in Mesopotamian (i.e. Sumerian) script, around the beginning of the third millennium BC, standing for the verbs gen – to go, gub – to stand and de6 – to carry.20 The gam was represented by a picture of the very first means of going or transportation: a foot (with the lower leg), or of a hooked or curved staff (walking stick?).21 The latter may also have played a role in construction work. Some people see an association with a cornered throw stick (a kind of boomerang; though I am not aware of the existence of such a thing there and then and do not recognize such a notion in words). In Hebrew and Arabic variant: words this symbol indeed often relates to the function of feet or a proverbial foot or basis: transportation, to move, to go (on foot), to carry, to gather, movement, foundation, (to place at) a pedestal. Sometimes it seems to represent mainly the bended shape (as e.g. in גָּבַב - gābab – to be bent/arched; though here too the foot of a house in the sense of גָּבֹהַּ gāboah – a hill, height, or unclear: discussions are still going on whether it is a gam or a pu (see further on).

In the beginning the angle was often placed at the bottom, in the later Paleo-Hebrew letter the angle definitively got positioned at the top. This stayed that way with the Greek capital gamma Γ (after the transition to the Greek the orientation did change from ‘from right to left’ to ‘from left to right’, making the side-bar of the gamma pointing to the right). Our G and C emerged from those, where from the gamma the Etruscans first formed the C – they had no gsound – and later the Ro

It can literally be interpreted from the symbols as: feet with water for a leader (see Table 2, further on).
As word this appears a.o. in the following text, from Genesis 24. Remarkably it is noted that the camels indeed belong to the ‘master’ (leader, lord; archeology has affirmed that in those days possessing them was indee

10a And the servant took ten camels (gemallim) of the camels of his master, and departed. For all the goods of his master were in his hand.

A camel and the weaning (or ‘ripening’) of a child (that too: גמל – see e.g. Psalm 131: 2; Genesis 21: 8) seem two very different things. From the old Semitic notions it becomes very clear: a weaned child (in that culture around 4, sometimes 5 or even 6 years of age) was one who could walk on his own feet, could fetch his own drink (notion of water) and could manage a shepherd’s stick (-). In such a dry climate it was easy to recompense any leader (e.g. for his protection), namely: go fetch water for him:
, which may well serve to explain the third meaning of גמ ל - to repay, recompense.

Da / dal / dalt / daleth

old:

variant:

unclear:

Dalt (later: daleth) was the notion of movement or flexibility, associated with the phoneme d, and was represented by a or a skewed triangular board of wood or woven materials attached to a pole (- l)). Compare the Proto-Semitic word daltu - door. Most often the symbol graphically represents a physical door, a door opening or entrance and has the meaning ‘to enter’, ‘entrance’.
Sometimes it means ‘to move’ or ‘to hang (down)’ – precisely what such a door did. The associated phoneme is the d – an imitation of the sound of the door closing. The notion of movement and the phoneme d seems occasionally represented by another symbol as well: that of a fish (דג - dag; digg in Phoenician). Next to a door and movement, the daleth also represents any opening as of a door, and the verbs to open and to expose.
It is interesting to look at the Hebrew word דֶּלֶת deleth [1817; cf. 1802] - door; that was:

- a hanging/moving panel or board that can open and give entrance ( ) by means of a big stick construction ( ). In an appendix I will go into detail on this.
Characteristic for delet as word (door in occasional movement, though not on its own initiative) is the following text, from Proverbs 26:
14 As the door (haddeleth) turns upon its hinge, so does the lazy man turns upon his bed.
In the Hebrew original, the hinge (singular!) here really is a door socket – a hard stone with a hole in it, in which a large round pole (stick) attached to the door panel could turn. See the related appendix. Note that the second pictograph above may well have been turned on its side!

How physical and flexible the old Semitic pictures script is, appears from the following example: what does this picture make you think of:
? Many people whom I ask think of a bra or bikini, in other words: of a pair of breasts. That is right. It is the word dad – breast(s), nipple(s). Here the sign is used in a broader pictographic way, apart from the basic notion it usually represents.22
The later Paleo-form often (not always) has a somewhat longer ‘stick’ right below. From the triangular shape the Greek capital Delta Δ developed, and from that our capital D (with the stick on the left side).

The Hebrew word dad may be an alteration of what was originally a thad. More on that word in the discussion of the lette with breasts from the ‘hanging’ of the breasts.

!– A study of the pictographic roots and basic notions underlying the earliest Biblical script

Ah / ha / hallu / hillul / hey
A most interesting notion (originally probably called āh, hā, hallu or hillul ; in Hebrew now hey) is that of awe and wonder or surrender: being amazed and joyfully excited about something you see or experience, often in the relationship with God. The original sound has probably been close to āh (still –internationally– a call of wonder/ awe!).
old:
Theologically, this is one of the most interesting notions in the entire set. It is represented by a picture of a perso encountered. Sometimes the middle stroke at the top (the head) was drawn as a small circle, sometimes the legs were spread, and sometimes one arm was directed downward.
In the most common form, as depicted here, the legs are bent (together) as in a kneeling variant: posture. This emphasizes the basic notion of awe and worship/adoration. This is in line with the Hebrew (and even Proto-Semitic) verb hillul/hallal – to worship, to praise, to glorify, to exalt in. Associate wonder (all three still reasons to lift your hands in the air, even with us) and to live or to breathe (compare how you stretch with a deep yawn). These meanings can still be discovered in many words containing the חא - hā, הָ.אָ- ’ahāh [162] and הָ- hāh [1929]. Remarkable I find the usage of this letter as prefixed question particle (הָ / – hā of wondering) and as suffix for ‘feminine’; apparently women were commonly associated with wonder and/or rejoicing ☺ ! The phoneme āh (aah) is still very fitting for the notion of wondering. 23
The use of הַ / - ha as definite article (actually: as emphasis / demonstrative element) finds its origin probably in the Proto-(West-)Semitic form

- han that can very well be regarded as a grammaticalization24 of ‘note the following’, or ‘behold, children!’

The hey is the fifth letter of the later aleph-beth; five – that calls forth an association with the five books of Moses, the Torah. The Torah also magnifies God and helps man to assume his proper position, living well in joy

Unfortunately, in my eyes, this letter got reduced or violated most of all the letters at the transition to Paleo-Hebrew. Only the upper part remained, set on its side, whereby apparently the association with the rich original notion got lost completely. Also the sound changed in the direction of the later ה .

This Paleo-form was mirrored (cf what I wrote with the gimel) at the transition to the Greek capital epsilon E and our capital E. In the square script form

Whenever you will encounter

nothing seems recognizable anymore from the theoa capital E again, remember logically most significant original notion of the that it is derived from a picah/ hallu/ hillul. Jewish mysticism has described the ture of a person with knees

ה in the square script as likening a high window in a small house, but any relationship of ה and a window

We find hey (or ha!) as word a.o. in the following (remarkably: Aramaic/Chaldean) text, from Daniel 3:

.- Hā!; some transl.: Look!) I see four men, not tied up, walking around there in the flames, unhurt; and the form of the fourth is like a son of gods!”

25 He exclaimed, “Behold! (הָא

The notion of

- hallal appears very frequently throughout the entire Bible, as word hallal a.o. in the following verses from 1 Chronicles 16 and Psalm 22:

4 And he appointed certain of the Levites to minister before the ark of YaHUaH, and to record, and to thank and praise (welehallēl) YaHUaH God of Israel.

23 You who fear YaHUaH, praise Him (hallelu-hu); all of you, the seed of Jacob, glorify Him;

and fear Him all the seed of Israel.

Hallal appears most in the Psalms (56%), and in general mostly God YaHUaH is the recipient of the honor or worship. However, there are a few cases where people are the recipients, as in Genesis 12 the beautiful Sarah:

15 The princes of Pharaoh also saw her and commended (waihallelu) her before Pharaoh. And the woman was taken into Pharaoh's house.

In old Chinese pictographs the basic symbol appears a lot in relation to the divine and to praise and blessing. It may be related to the old Semitic ah, but also to the Paleo-Hebrew shape of kaph (see further on).

Old Akkadian confirms in fact also that the āh sound is the original one here. There the h-sound even was (almost) absent from it there. The (emphasized) Hebrew article ה)mostly pronounced hā; corresponding to an emphasi

Wa / u / wawu / wav

Also frequent and very interesting is wav (originally probably: wa, wawu or u) – the notion of security and connection or bonding (especially with the Creator or Source of Life), close to our psychological notion of secure attachment. As such it is also a model of the vine (cf. John 15). As phoneme it is associated with the consonant w, and the vowel u (oo), later old:
also the vowel o.

It is represented symbolically by a tent pin; a sharpened stick that was put in the ground for attaching lines (guy-ropes) that kept one's tent upright. It provided the connection as well as security – that one's tent and all in it would not collapse or be blown away in a raging desert storm. The wav sign was also used in its physical meaning of any small variant: (pointed) stick, such as an arrow, or a living 'stick in the ground', as a vine. Incidentally it might also signify a man (as only a small stick in the hand of his Creator), or a rib or other bone.

The shape of this symbol/ letter largely stayed the same over many ages, with small variations in the shape of the 'heac
Y and our Y and V/U (and the W derived from those), and of the Greek digamma F and our F.

In Babylonian/Assyrian culture the joyful notion of secure connectedness to the Creator YaHUaH got lost entirely. As a consequence, the wav at the beginning of words in Aramaic and in Aramaic-influenced post-exilic Hebı (literally:
- a vine (a stable, connecting and nourishing stick in the ground) with arms/branches [tendrils] bearing fruits) - wine, or to tend a vineyard (the words wine, wein (D), wijn (NL), vin (F) etc. are clearly derived from the old Semitic wayin !). Sometimes wav in Hebrew is replaced by another letter, like the 'aleph, as in 'echad (here, too, a version with yod: yachad), from wachad (the pin near the doorpost [on which the door turns, which connects the unstable door to the wall and which remains stable amidst all the movement of the door], or a stick in the ground to limit the movement [of a tent or animal], such that it remains stable and reliably at its proper place). (By the way: in several other Semitic languages like Arabic and Ge'ez it is still wayin and wachad.)

As conjunction/prefix the wav still represents the notion of connecting, as it equates to our 'and' (even in Akkadian u was the conjunction; this even got adopted into late- Sumerian). While at the same time it keeps some of its notion of security, as sometimes a wav at the beginning of a sentence adds emphasis, and can be translated as 'Surely …'.

There is one wav-word that survived the Babylonian/Aramaic disconnection. That is wav - ו! - itself as a separate word meaning 'hook', 'nail' or 'connecting pin', which occurs a few times in the Bible, in particular in the description of the Tabernacle, where it connects an important curtain (a.o. Exodus 26: 32; remarkable is the ה in the plural there: הם'ו ; these wav's were hooks involved in worship service).

Furthermore, the Bible is full of this notion of connection/belonging and security provided by God, as often represented by the wav.

!– A study of the pictographic roots and basic notions underlying the earliest Biblical script

Za / zan / zayin

Zan, the basic building block: cutting or mowing (with the typical z-sound of that!) is represented by a picture of kinc as zayin. By extension this was used for every sharp, large tool, for example also for a plow, or a sword or similar weapon, or for a large (butcher's) knife. From there we see also

old:

concepts such as to cut or to chop up, and harvest (as the grain harvest was collected with a zayin) or to make space (in dense overgrowth). The zan/zayin is the seventh letter in the later alphabet, and not without reason; note that the notion of cutting off (from the rest of the days) and making space is also in the seventh day – the shabbath.

Possibly this letter originates in two distinct letters; Arabic still discerns in corresponding unclear: words a dz- and a dh- sound (ز and ذ respectively), where the first can be associated especially with words arc cutting. In the corresponding Aramaic words the second often changed into a daleth. The scholar Brian E. Colless sees in various inscriptions a sign = at the beginning of lines as a variant of the zayin: dh – an old Semitic demonstrative pronoun, akin to our ‘this’.

The sound belonging to the notion of mowing, and so with the

- za, is a sound as of our z.

Zayin in full ( ) appears as such a.o. in the verb ’azin – first the chopper-knife through the bushes / the scythe through the grain – ‘to create space’ (though the usual grammatical interpretation differs slightly), a.o. in Proverbs 17:

_- mezin; creates space for) an

4 A wicked doer gives heed to false lips; a liar gives ear to (|' ִ מ evil tongue.

It is quite likely that via these first metal tools, zayin came to represent also anything metal, anything valuable or s metals). For example: ‘gold’ in old Semitic is

- what I interpret as ‘the metal (the material of the big knives) in the worship-house/-tent (the temple or tabernacle)’ (see Table 2). So, zayin can also represent: to decorate (with ornaments of gold, silver, etc.). When one is going to worship ( ) all that is made of (comes forth from;) that precious metal , one ends up at what the Most High calls fornication or serving as a harlot (זונה ( )why do people today still sell themselves in prostitution? mostly for the money! – apparently it still is that way, also in that sense).

The seventh day was set apart, cut off or dedicated for sanctified use as the precious metal in the temple.

There is also a hypothesis that the zan/zayin originally represented the olive, olive-oil and the shining features of it (compare: זית - zayith/zeithan [2132] in table 2, also words like זוב2100]] - zub – to flow, seem to confirm this). Because of likeness in color and brilliance it then later came to represent bronze as well, when that was discovered (molten bronze looks very much like olive oil), and especially a scythe or sword made from that metal. This might be the basis of the Arabian distinction as well.

The shape has only been somewhat simplified in the course of the ages. The zayin was the basis of the Greek zeta Z (the sound of this could be an affirmation of the olive oil hypothesis mentioned above; from the Greek zeta, zayith seems a more probable original than zan) and our letter Z. With the origin of our alphabet it was first considered unnecessary (even Shakespeare still considered it superfluous!) and left out; therefore it finally ended up at the end.

The early Chinese basic symbol for knife/sword/scythe (dao):

; later variant: , seems clearly related in shape as well as sound (the latter especially considering that the link woul Aramaic, where z - d or d - z shifts have been observed frequently). Japanese knows this symbol for sword as well: 刀 (it looks like that for power: 力, but those two appear etymologically unrelated; the oldest forms of the power-symbol pictured an arm and so this symbol is in origin and meaning more related to the Semitic yad or kaph).

Cha / chet / chuts?

A covering tissue, wall, outside border, separation, boundary, or limit is a notion represented by a picture of a curtain or wallpanel of a tent or tabernacle: the cha or chet (also: cheith). The meanings include also: outside, fence, skin/leather, border, limit and texture. By extension it refers to the flesh and skin, as opposed to bones of a human or animal body.

could be an alternative old form, representing a twined thread or rope, the basis-form of tissue. In the Paleo-form this symbol has been put on its side. The square script form could be seen as a rather radical further simplification. From the old Semitic chet the Greek eta H (/η) and our H originated, as well as the chi X (/χ ; the latter could well be old:

related in shape to the alternative – yet unclear – old form).

Chet as full word does not appear in the Bible. The form

- חת we do encounter as the name of the patriarch of the Hittites (esp. in Genesis 23), and the form

- חית

(chaiyath; beast, animals, vermin) as declination of chai - life, wild animals (readable as: flesh ( ) with legs ( ); a.o. Genesis 1:25; Hoshea 2: 12). So, this offers few clues.

unclear: However, the concept represented by the chet does appear clearly in the Bible. God is a God Who regularly sets clear boundaries. The Tabernacle had a wall all around – on purpose.

A more important old Semitic chet-word appears to be chuts חוץ - the boundary of sticks and some kind of plants or of sticks and cloth (cotton or linen? – see at tsade), also: outside (Genesis 6:14). Or, if it had been set up with smaller sticks or branches, chajits - fence (note that betw and/or stones were used – see also at the discussion of the samekh as a palm tree, which were often used to mark an area of land; and with a tent, like the tabernacle, sticks and large pieces of fabric made of plant material were used for the external wall and for the walls in between compartments). Honoring such a boundary becomes

- chatsah - divide (the space) in two. From there also mechitsa - מחיצה partition/division, mechetsa - מחצה - half and c fence).

Chet' as חטא (sin) stands literally for: 'the boundary/wall/outside of the clay basket first' which reminds me of Jesus accusing the Pharisees of focusing on the outside performance instead of a renewal of the heart. In that they missed the mark completely, which is what this word chet' exactly represents. (An alternative interpretation is that refers to '[what led to] the flesh/ body had to be clothed/surrounded, in the beginning'; cf. Gen.3).

The curtain/veil in the temple (a kind of tent wall/cloth) was spiritually related to the human flesh, as explained in Hebrews 10: 20. In the name of Eve (

- 2332חוה]] – - Chuah or Chawwah) Adam indeed expresses his joyful wonder ( ) over her being of the same flesh ( ) and bones ( ).

!– A study of the pictographic roots and basic notions underlying the earliest Biblical script

Ta / teth

The ninth elementary notion has to do with man’s awareness of being created or taken out of the earth that once surrounded him; as if being formed by a great Potter out of clay. Related to this, the symbol teth pictures either an earthenware bowl or basket, or a potter’s wheel. In both cases it is related to the root

, from which Hebrew טוה and

old:

Arab طوى - tawa(h) - to twist, to wrap around. Besides the connotation with ‘to twist or wrap [tent pins or twigs] together’, the connotation to the turning of an earthenware bowl on a potter’s wheel – that turns around a pin or axle – has been forwarded.

Hence, the underlying notions pictured by the teth include: to turn around, to surround, shell, to contain, to cover, and clay or mud (טיט - tiyt - one’s hand surrounded by clay like that of the potter’s, appears in the Bible as clay or mud; cf. Yesha-Yahu/Isaiah 41:25). The relationship with a wheel, which has been forwarded, seems to refer mainly to the potter’s wheel used in creating an earthenware bowl, also considering the words in which the teth appears. Aramaic (literally, according the symbols: what comes forth from ‘working’ clay וטי and Arabic طين - tin with your hand) is potter’s clay, a basis for the verb to daub or coat with clay. A surrounding

( ) that can easily be formed ( ) by hand ( ) and out of twigs (small branches:) is a teth - טית - basket.

When the covering wasn’t with clay, twigs or textile but with planks or beams, or when a cover or shelter is upheld with big sticks, the combination was used, as in Hebrew טלל - talal [2 92 6] - to cover (esp. with planks). When there is too much of it, it becomes

- טלם - telem [29 28] - oppression, as in Arabic ظلم z.alama/zulam - to do (or treat s.o.) wrong or evil, to be or grow darkness. (Another way to derive this word is as follows: Sharing is a high value in Semitic cultures. To cover (hide) water or abundance - telem - was considered evil.) Note that young lambs need a stable covering first, while sacrificial lambs provide a kind of spiritual ‘covering’, hence

- 3 - 922 2טלא]]

- tela’ or

- 4 292טלה]] - taleh for ‘lamb’; probably the latter - telah - is more original – a protection before worship.25

The pure technical Paleo-form was hardly changed. Here too, the square script form can be seen as a -radical- further simplification. In the Greek theta 0 still some more of the teth can be recognized. In the Latin, and so in our present day script, this letter was not adopted.

Sometimes the teth got mixed up with tav, tsade, daleth or zajin. This kind of ‘exchanges’ can make it more difficult to reconstruct the original old Semitic notion and its associated symbol.

The teth makes me regularly think of the New Testament notions of our ‘being in Christ’ (Colossians 3: 3) and His being in us – ‘the treasure in earthen vessels’ (2 Corinthians 4: 7). Significant in that context is the name of Lot: לוט - the Leader (God) secured his ‘shell’, while he himself ( ) was connected ( ) with twisting ( ) the truth, and had a covered ( ) pin ( ) (he was uncircumcised).

The notion of ‘being spotted or patched’ as ‘being covered with spots/patches’ (21 9 2טלא]] - tala’) may also be at the basis of this word (cf. Genesis 30: 35). And some young animals tend to be spotted anyway.

Ya / yad / yud / yod

Then, as tenth, we encounter again a most interesting notion and associated symbol: the yad/yud or later yod. In the old handwritings, clay tablets, etc. two shapes appear, as depicted here. Both represent a forearm, from elbow to and including the hand (with loose thumb). It stands in particular for the giving hand or the working hand. Next also old:

generalized to: arm, branch (any side-branch of anything: body, plant, river, …), to work, to throw or to worship.

The sound of the original yod (in those days: yad) was comparable to our y (consonant; the continental European j) as well as our i (so, as vowel; note that our j descended only relatively recently from the i !).

variant: It formed the basis for the Greek iota I and our I and later J. The Paleo-form is a slightly rotated variant of one of the older forms. The square script form ' is again a very radical further simplification.

As a prefix, the yod could denote literally ‘he gives’ / ‘he will give’ (creating out of the rest of the word something that God gives), which generalized to ‘he’ (2nd p. masc. imperfect). As suffix, ‘I’ am the recipient, so the yod stands for ‘mine’.

In the Bible, the full word yad appears frequently as referring to a human hand or to the hand of God, as in Exodus 13: 14 (see also under the next letter, the kaph). As the male genital is kind of a ‘branch’ on the body, it was often denoted by the yad as well, as by the word yad in Yesha-yahu (Isaiah) 57: 8. Generalized as a side, bank or small arm or branch of a river, it appears in Exodus 2:5 – the finding of Moses by Pharaoh’s daughter:

And Pharaoh's daughter came down to the Nile to bathe while her maids walked along the arm / border (yad) of the river. She saw the ark among the reeds and sent a servant girl to get it.

Ka / kaph

The kaph symbol shows a raised hand. This can be a reigning, victorious hand, or a blessing hand. In both cases it is a hand that reflects the elementary notion of authority (think of a king or queen or a spiritual leader who raises a hand and everyone is silenced). Meanings deriving from this elementary notion of authority are such as: to reign, to bless, to set after one’s hand, to admit, to tame, and to cover. Later the forearm was added in the picture, picturing the hand in a childish simple way by a few strokes (fingers) connected on one end to the arm (note that this form shows affinity with that of the lamed, which is there in its meaning also). The last Paleo form is an abstraction of this. The final old:

kaph in the square script seems derived from it. The regular form in the square script looks like a simplification of the original form, put on its left side. The Greek kappa K and our K are derived from the old Semitic kaph.

The second person (in the Bible: Israel to whom God spoke) being the recipient of the blessing or protection, the kaph as suffix stands for ‘you’. As prefix I also think of blessing those who are not present; for example: ‘… as/like the blessed Moses …’ – which came to stand for a comparison in general. The word ך כ

- kaph is the hollow (

/ פ ; see further on) of the hand (Akkadian: kappu), though there is an additional reading, which is also related to another literal meaning of the symbols: a strong (or commanding) wind (

) that makes everything in nature (reed, trees, even people) to bend (compare words like ך כפ and כפה (.

Kaph has sometimes become mixed up with qoph and with gimel (concerning the latter: e.g. ךג - gaph in Aramaic is a bird’s wing – probably the waving/blowing hand - kaph - of a bird; cf. what Jesus says about the blessing of Father God being as a caring/blessing wing of a mother bird over her young, though also interpretable from the gaph form as the device to ‘go or travel on/with the wind’).

The idea of a hand radiating or representing power we clearly encounter in the Bible (often it uses the word yad for ‘hand’ with an adjective expressing power, e.g. chazaq) as in Deuteronomy 26: 8 (cf. also 4:34; 5:15; 7:19; Exodus 3:19; 13:9,14,16; Yirme-Yahu 21:5; 32:21; Ezekiel 20:34), where we read:

8 And YaHUaH brought us forth out of Egypt with a mighty hand, and with an outstretched arm [cf. the kaph, sign of His power/might, and the yod, sign of His dedication to work something out], and with fearful might, and with miracles and with wonders.

And in Ezekiel 20:5 the lifted hand is both a blessing and a ruling hand, with a promise:

5 and thou hast said unto them: Thus said the Lord YaHUaH: In the day of My fixing on Israel, I lift up My hand, To the seed of the house of Jacob, And am known to them in the land of Egypt, And I lift up My hand to them, Saying, I am YaHUaH your God.

La / lam / lamad / lamed

The twelfth notion is that of a leader or shepherd. A shepherd’s staff or ox goad served as a model for the original lam symbol (later also lamed, lamad). Often the lam stood (pars pro toto) for the shepherd or leader himself (or even any man), or for the verbs to lead, to educate, to teach, to instruct, to drive on, or to bind, or for direction, or for a old yoke imposed. Sometimes a lam was literally used as a pictograph for a stick (e.g. tent (orientation pole, walking stick). In Biblical language, often the lam stood for the great Shepherd and & curl Leader, God Himself. varying):

As prepositional prefix the lamed kept its idea of gently pushing or directing, meaning ‘to …’/ ‘towards’/‘unto’ and to denote possession (‘of’).

Fürst and others note that on the end of words, the lamed can sometimes denote the diminishing form; and that it sometimes has been dropped or changed into an ‘ayin.

Concerning the shape: the curl at the one end of the stick seems to have diminished somewhat over time (very early variants sometimes show a full 360o curl). The orientation varied strongly. The orientation of the Pale recognized in the orientation as in the Paleo variant, while the Greek lambda Λ seems based on another, differently oriented variant. Remarkably, in the Demotic script, a similar shape refers to the divine or kingly (ultimate leadership).

Concerning the Bible, of course the shepherd’s stick or -staff from Psalm 23 is very well known. The word למד signifies that with a shepherd’s staff one gets a lot of movement [into a herd of cattle] or make them enter a stable or sheepfold. Conjugations of the verb lamad - to teach - appear twice in Yirme-Yahu (Jeremiah) 12: 16 (cf. also Psalm 25: 4, 5):

And it shall come to pass, if they will diligently learn My entire way from My people, to swear by My name: 'YaHUaH live,' even as they taught My people to swear by Ba‘al; then shall they be built up in the midst of My people.

Mu / am / maim / mem

Then there is the notion of abundance that is there with God, associated with water (the drops in the sea or the sand particles on the shore cannot be counted). Thus, a childishly simple drawing of water is the origin of the symbol mem (mu, maim). It stands for: water, sea, flood, abundance, mighty, and much/many.
As a suffix, the mem denotes the plural form; a multiple or abundance, in line with the underlying notion and its normal meaning. As prefix I relate it to the water from which we came (which we can associate with either the amniotic fluid, the water of the great flood or the old:

water that covered the earth at the beginning of Genesis 1; cf. 2 Petrus 3: 5 – '…the earth formed out of water and by means of water…')).
The Greek mu M (/μ) and our M are easily recognized in it. In the Paleo form it got a big, bended stroke on the right (appearing to me -subjectively- as if one wanted to dam or curb the power of the water somewhat; in the lower case μ this was mirrored to the left side).

Such an enormous, impressive sea/abundance of water that no mere man could give it, or keep it in his/her hands, was ascribed to God: ים - yam - literally: 'He gives [this] abundance/water'; this is the old Semitic word for sea.
In the Bible water – especially fresh, 'living' (life-giving, drinkable) water – is a most vital notion; not so strange in a land where the presence of sufficient water is mostly not so obvious as it sometimes seems to us. And so it became a metaphor for the salvation we need just as badly. As Yesha-Yahu 12: 3 says:
And with joy you shall draw water out of the wells of Yeshu'ah (salvation).
How widely this notion of the mu, ma or am has been distributed among languages, is illustrated to me by the fact that even in the Niger-Congo and Bantu languages in Africa, the prefix or suffix ma represents a liquid like water or something that cannot be numbered.

Nu / nun
The next notion is that of new life or a next generation, represented by a sprouting seed. This is depicted in the symbol nun (with u pronounced as oo).26 Original meanings of the nun then are: seed, seedling, offspring, descendant, that what appears from, new life, son (showing some likeness to the Hebrew word זרע - zera), and the verbs to continue or old:
to bring forth. The significant word נִין - nin [5209] means offspring (
- as coming forth from semen or seed from the male yad).
As a suffix to other words, nun often represents a noun (!) depicting something that is the result of or follows from the constituent other word, as e.g. in למדן - a learned man, from למד - teaching/ learning (see at the letter lamed, above), or בנין - a building, from בנה - to build (lit. to celebrate/lift up/ erect a house for your offspring). Often the nun comes in front, as a prefix denoting 'what comes forth from', as very elementary in נ ץ - nets [5322] – 'what comes forth from a plant' – blossom, or some –not further specified– bird.
As a grammatical prefix the nun also denotes the family community around me and I: 'we', or as suffix (often with the wav of bonding: -nu) 'us', or (often with yod: -ni) 'me'.
Regarded the notions it is not strange that the roots לא and נ א are similar in meaning; there is little difference between letting a child or a leader go first, in both cases you wait a little while.

Nun (

- נון (in full is in fact ‘continuation of life secured through offspring’. In association with that it is remarkable in the difficult context of Exodus 33 how Joshua is denoted as ‘son of Nun’:

11 And YaHUaH would speak to Moses face to face, as a man speaks to his friend. And he turned again to the camp. But his servant, Joshua the son of Nun, a young man, did not leave the middle of the tabernacle.

Joshua, a picture of Yehoshua‘/Yeshu‘ah (Jesus; the name Joshua or Yehoshua‘ is in fact the same as Yeshu‘ah), was the ‘son of Nun’ – the son through whom life continued into the promised land, secure and connected, like Yehoshua‘ - Jesus is The Son securing the continuation of Life, securely bonded, by incorporating many as children (offspring) in the home/family of God…

In the course of time the dot at the top disappeared, leaving only a zigzag line. In the Paleo form it is not completely clear, but it seems a small zigzag has replaced the dot, while the line has only one bend left. Thus it has become a simpler edition of the mem, like the derived Greek nu N and Latin N are with respect to the M, and M respectively.

In the Old Chinese there was a very similar, though somewhat more detailed symbol for a son, child or offspring/descendant:

(sometimes the three ‘hairs’ were omitted there as well). Even in current Japanese script this symbol for a baby, child or young is still recognizable: 子.

Remarkable I find the many nu-related words in many languages related to new life.

About the origin of this symbol some discussion has been going on. This is typically a case where one’s starting points will determine what one will see. Those who position the origin of the old Semitic script in Egypt and not further back than 2000 to 2500 BC, see a resemblance to the Egyptian symbol for snake (the snake was an important idol in Egypt). Scientists open to the option of an older, possibly even much older, not necessarily Egyptian origin of the old Semitic and who worship YaHUaH, the God of the Bible as God (and hence not join in with the worship of snakes), see in the nun a sprouting seed reflecting new life. The words in which the nun appears appear to affirm the latter group. Also the similarity with the mentioned old-Chinese symbol clearly confirms the seed-/offspring-notion.

Sa/si / samekh / sin

One of the letters from the old Semitic that was least clear is the samekh that probably coincided with the sin and possibly also had either name. Various theories on early forms and associated meanings have been forwarded. Therefore I will show some more of my investigations here, as compared to the other letters. On the left you see three variants of old:

early shapes. The first old image – also the basis for the later Paleo-Hebrew and Phoenician forms – has been associated pictures with thorn(s) or a thorny plant. Lastly, there is a doubtful (therefore: drawn in light gray), possibly regional third variant: fish.

A quite general idea is that the first would have the meaning ‘support’ or ‘support pillar’. I very unclear: do not know all about it, but that this meaning would be based on an Egyptian hieroglyph, seems largely based on ill-information.27 The second, much less occurring variant actually is equal to the Egyptian hieroglyph s and might be a representation of the original tsade.

Other meanings that I encountered included: to protect (possibly related to the thorny plants often put surrounding a ho grasp (thorns on some seeds grab the fur of animals for distribution), evil and to hate. In word meanings I do recognize some of the meaning of support and thorn, but not that of a fish, which enforced my suspicion that the basic meaning could be some thorny plant.
Another letter that was unclear for some time to me, was the sin, whose origin is likely the same as that of the samekh (one reason to assume this, is that in various Semitic languages there is no samekh and on that spot in the alphabet a sin appears; another reason is that various old words like that for a booth, sok, appear with a samekh as well as with a sin). So I stumbled upon the word sansin - 5577|סנס)) -

- which seems the repetition of an old root,
- literally: ‘what comes forth from / seed of [whatever-the-samekh-stands-for]’ with the meaning:
bough or fruit-stalk of a date tree. And indeed, these sturdy trees – ubiquitous in the Middle East from old times – have typical leaves and fruit-bearing boughs at the top and kind of big ‘thorny’ sharp remains ( ) of branches ( )/fronds/leaves: (
- 5-,5512|ס')) thorn28) all around the whole stem/trunk. Also from the edges of the fronds ( ) thorns come forth ( ). This sin could then have been the name of the old letter as well!
‘To cover’ is a frequent association with samekh (cf. e.g.

כסה - kasah (3680, 3780)29 – the blessing of palm leaves, or:

honoring a ruler with palm leaves [by so covering him against the sun]). In antiquity, coverings were often made from palm leaves.

The symbols depicted by the red arrows are samekh/sin’s; note the tall ‘trunk’.

This theory is based on likeness with the Egyptian hieroglyph for a Djed column or Tet pillar: , which some think to be a supporting pillar, which it is not. The Egyptian Djed pillar was a highly cultic tube-like structure (related to a hollow papyrus-stem and the sacral vertebrae of an idol) filled with seed (wheat, or godly/human semen, thought to originate in the spinal fluid) in Egypt's fertility and power directed cult, often depicted in the company of snakes and the ankh symbol (which depicts the fruit at the top of a palm tree). As such one could relate it to the tree of knowledge of good and evil, eating the fruit of which God had forbidden. If there is any relation of the samekh with the Djed pillar hieroglyph, it is to be found in the Egyptian symbol of the Djed pillar being derived from (the same background as) the samekh/sin, I assume.

Quote from a web page on palm tree trimming: "Some palms (Phoenix canariensis) leaves are very spiky, and can be hazardous to come in contact with." And: "Many species of palms have thorns on the edges the palm leaves and could be hazardous to the palm trimmer."

29

Kasah - 3780כשה)) – to cover with flesh, to grow fat, is well explainable as worshipping ther blessings of the date palm (of so much sugar you will get fat!). The sin in it may in origin well be a conflation of shin and samekh: to be covered/blessed with with sugar-rich dates and shade of palm leaves as by a source of abundance. The same for sok - 7900שׂך)) - booth (pavilion or tabernacle) – the place where that could happen. I still have to check this with other Semitic languages and old sources, though. The first tents and shelters seem to have been made from palm leaves, using a palm trunk as support.

The Written Language of Abraham, Moses and David

The Old South Arabian script (an early offshoot of West-Semitic used for Himyarite, Sabaean, etc.) depicts samekh like this: , which is in full accordance with the patterned look of the stem/trunk of a date/palm tree.

So, all that makes the date tree or any palm tree30 a very likely candidate to have served as model for the original samekh/sin.31 Let us look whether that is affirmed or refuted by other word-meanings/-associations.

Seeing a palm tree in the samekh, and a palm branch (or the dry and spiky remains of it) in ו‌ס indeed explains words like 5579סנפיר)) - senappiyr - 'fin', rather easily; in this case:

- 'palm frond to blow (air) with your hand at an other', that is: a hand fan; similar to a fin indeed. Related: 5585סעיף) cf. -9) - sa'iph - fronds, boughs (from the hand-fans you 'see' in it, or 'date palm sees the hand at the mouth [eating the fruit, amidst the branches]') or cleft (the clefts in the trunk between the 'thorns' are used to climb to reach the eaten fruit and the leaves; cf. also 5572-3סנה))). And: 5585סעף)) - sa'aph –

(hand-fans) are then contracted in other compound words to them): 5603-4|סף)) – to cover in, panel [as those made of woven palm-leaves]. Moving them up and down

Later, man-made columns may have resembled the straight-up trunk of the palm trees, which may have led to the support-notion. But words like 5582-3|סעד)) - ca‘ad - to sustain, stay, to support, may also derive much more literally from the old Semitic form
: ‘a palm

(5584) - to rush, of that stormy wind). This sturdiness may as well be behind 37-,5620|סר)) - sar - ‘another like a palm tree’; unmovable, samak, above). When a skilled man (shepherd or leader) climbs/goes up (

- 5559|סלק)) - seliq.
Then how about the palm tree pictures and carvings in the Jerusalem Temple (1 Kings 6:29-35; Ezekiel 41: 18-26)? They are not written with samekh but with a word beginning with a tav: ת מ ר - tamar/timmor(ah) [8561]. One could posit that that is because that is what they were: pictures and carvings (fully in line with the meaning of tav)! An original tav-samekh may have been conflated into tav only.
An more plausible explanation on tamar is that it stands for a sign of water/abundance from the Other (where there were palm trees, there was water!). Still another one is suggested by Arabic thamara - to bear fruit,
- the source of water (liquid; juice, oil, life) of the Other/other. Palm trees were a rich source of fruits, juice and oil and a symbol for the tree of life.32

Possibly also including what we now call an agave, which is very similar in basic shape. Its leaves’ fibers, sisal, are used also to make rope. B.t.w.: pure coincidence that sisal – especially used by farmers (cf.), worldwide – has two s’s and an l in it…?
In the 2nd millennium BC this was a usual way to depict a palm tree. See for example the palm trees at the map/floor plan of a luxurious villa with gardens from the tomb of Amten in Thebe (Egypt, XVIIIth dynasty; there depicted with not one but three top-fronds and three on each side).

of the old philosopher Pliny („Olim in palmarum foliis scriptitatum") the palm leaf is supposed to be the first writing material. Biblical Hebrew seems to confirm this vision with words such as 5608-5613ספר)) sépher/sáphar - sannah - 'crown of the palm tree' or 'what comes forth from the palm tree for worship', is an old word for book/scroll… In Sanskrit one and the same word is used for writing and for a palm frond from God, fully in line with the notions. This underwrites clearly what I denote from Arabic, with the possibility that somewhere the sh/s exchange (as apparently occurred somewhere in the development of Hebrew) has to be taken into consideration, such that we can see the Akkadian gitshimaru as related to a reconstructed West-Semitic samar - the palm tree with water/abundance of God.

33 How dangerous this 'skirt' can be appears still regularly even in present time. Only in the USA almost yearly death casualties occur among people who tried to remove it, often by its 'coming lose' unexpectedly.

34 This (with other things that have emerged lately) casts serious doubts regarding the expertise of the translators of the Septuagint (LXX) who made them into Mandrakes, a poisonous plant of which the roots and fruits contain hallucinogens, but certainly not specifically improve sexual appetite or fertility! Remarkable is that Mandrakes were often employed in the world of occultism (Babylon!)…

35 A Biblical basis for the association of the date palm with the Tree of Life is the following. In Genesis cherubs guard t with an alternation of cherubs and date palms (and open flowers - lilies?) (1 Kings 6:29-35; cf. Eze. 40:1637; 41:18-26)
A prime vision on the so called Assyrian Sacred Tree actually sees it as representing a symbol of the date palm, and relates it to its fertility enhancing fruits and/or to the Divine power to bestow life.

All this affirms the samekh/sin = palm or date tree hypothesis. Since I did not encounter a single contra-argument, I have adopted this hypothesis.
It also shows that some confusion with tsade may likely have started early, since, however different they may be, palm trees and papyruses both are decked with a big flat circular 'crown' of horizontal leaves that makes a very pretty sunshade, and whose – dried– leaves allow weaving into mats and the like that make good sunshades as well.37
It is good to know the truth, but it is better to speak of palm trees.

Very intriguing I consider the 5572סנה]] – the senah/ceneh, from which God spoke to Mosheh (Moses; Exodus 3: 2-4). I always found it peculiar that He, Who sees thorns and thistles as evil, would choose a thorn bush to speak from. However, when we see that סנ stood for a (fruit)branch of a date tree, and that one worshipped in those days with lifted hands (as the palm tree seems to do with its ‘arms’/ branches), then we can identify סנה as the leaves and fruit bearing ‘crown’ of a date palm. When we additionally consider that the date tree had a connotation with the Tree of Life, with stability and support (both stability in its trunk and nourishing and healthy in its fruit) coupled to a measure of being hard to access when one did not eat of its fruit regularly (removing the old branches), all of a sudden the picture becomes a lot more understandable.

Do we add the images of palm trees in the temple – wanted there by God – and the facts that He resides or eats in the middle of סנה)Deut.33: 16), and that people who recognize(d) Jesus’ divinity, waved with (date)palm fronds or ditto branches to Him (John 12:13; Rev.7:9), then everything fits nicely together!

Even biologically, the palm is closer related to the papyrus then one might expect. From the same web page as one of the previous footnotes: “Palms are not trees, and are better categorized with the grass family.” (Both belong to the so-called ‘mono cotyledones’ or mono cots, just like the banana tree, the lily, the onion and the orchid. Quite fitting, in mono theism…)

See e.g. this blog for some examples of what is still being made out of palm leaves in Egypt. Note that also raffia (used to make rope or to weave mats) is made of palm leaves.

In his big treatise on the history of Egypt and southwest Asia, Maspero noted about the palm tree in Mesopotamia:

“The date palm meets all the other needs of the population; they make from it a kind of bread, wine, vinegar, honey, cakes, and numerous kinds of stuffs; the smiths use the stones of its fruit for charcoal; these same st

The usual explanation ‘thorn bush’ is still more peculiar, because the word סנסנה - cancannāh is well identified by the renowned dictionaries as ‘palm frond/branch’. And the old Canaanite town קרית סנה Qirjat cannāh (Joshu palm fronds – from the crown of the palm tree – were likely the original writing material)! Also: קרית ספר Qirjat cepher (cf. dabar = word).

!– A study of the pictographic roots and basic notions underlying the earliest Biblical script

Even more striking it all becomes, when we note down the Greek word that is used there in its earliest form: ΦOINIΞ , and then look at the image of the corresponding letters from which the Greek were derived:
(or
) – ‘to see the palm fronds and its fruit stems go up and down (or blow)’. This Greek word was used for the name of the Phoenicians, historically: seamen and inhabitants of coastal areas (palms!), but the etymology of ΦOINIΞ (a.o. in the Septuagint of Ps.92:12 (LXX 91:13) and Job 29:18) was unknown so far, according Thayer’s lexicon. And, yes, the mythic bird Phoenix (Φοινιξ as well; according the Egyptians a re-incarnation of the highest God) is reported f Ovid), each 500 years, after which it burned itself there and renewed its life.
I read these phoenix myths as a mythic corruption of the real event, where the Angel of YaHUaH landed in fire on top of a palm tree and spoke to Mosheh (Moses), announcing new life for God’s people (and/ or an earlier similar encounter with someone else). In that, the palm tree symbolically represents the presence of God in which He brings new life to His people (concerning Ovid’s period of 400500 years: cf. Gen.15:13 - 400- 500 years Mosheh the consecration of the 1st temple with palm trees - 1 Kings 6: 1, 29-35; again such a period later the 2nd temple, and lastly ‘tongues as of fire’ representing God’s Does this look presence on top of people worshipping with raised hands (like palm trees), in Acts 2, like what again ca. 500 years later – all as sign of God’s presence and renewal of the Mosheh saw? covenantal relationship with His people).
Chinese tradition (in particular from the 11th cent. BC; about 300 years after Mosheh) calls the Phoenix:

Fenghuang (鳳凰), says that this big, both masculine and feminine flying being is the opponent of the dragon [which in essence is a snake, still with legs!] and pictures him, attacking snakes with its strong claws. He would embody the five most important virtues [goodness, uprightness, knowledge, faithfulness/integrity and goo was without darkness and corruption. They apparently heard something…
(This explanation on the סנה - seneh may also give a base for the explanation of the earlier mentioned סלק - seliq – the palm tree from which ’El, the Primary Shepherd, raised (like the sun at dawn), as a word for to ascend or go up (high).)

Isaiah 19: 18 talks about a future when five cities of Egypt will speak Canaani֯ח֯te (not Egyptian) and one city will be
- to worship the God of the palm tree! Some think this refers to Heliopolis - the city of the sun-god.
Remarkable is also the verb שרף - saraph [8313,-5] - to burn, literally:
to blow like the palm tree of God;39 or seraph [8314] - a kind of angel with 6 wings (3 on both sides!) speaking in the Name of God…
Nelson and Broadberry show that in the older Chinese pictographs the Name of the original God of the Chinese, (Shang) Di (possibly related to Shaddai), was represented symbolically by a representation of the Trinity atop a tree (the Tree of Life).
A similar 'leftover' of Biblical notions (spiritually we often observe the adversary copying things of God – though partly and badly) we see in the possible roots of the Sinaï (סינ'(peninsula and mountain. Both the above word seneh and the name of the Mesopotamian moon-god whose name was equal to that of the Israel Liberata
1958 and 1971
letter Sin have been forwarded as root of this name (and both may derive from memorial coins
the same root, as the above illustrates). According old mythology this god is the Creator and highest God, and the son of a god whose name was abbreviated shortly to El. In the middle to end of the 3rd millennium BC his greatest sanctuaries stood in Ur and CHarran – places we know from the story of Abraham, of course.
Very interesting is also the word 5511סינים)) - Sinim (in the Bible only in Yesha-Yahu (Isaiah) 49:12), which many relate to the inhabitants of (Southern) China (perhaps also those of (Western) America – the document, I will dig further into this.
Just like the palm, we may lift our arms/hands in the encounter with YaHUaH and welcome His fiery and delighting presence.

This notion of the 'blowing' of the palm fronds towards God as expression of glorifying Him, we encounter in many words. E.g. in פַּאַר - pa'ar [6286] - to glorify, decorate, gleam; but also: shake a tree, go over the boughs; according to the symbols: to blow towards the prominent Other (God), like the palm פְּא֯- pe'ér [6287] - a fancy head dress (hair or hat). And: פּוּארָה fronds did. With other vowelization: ר֯ peo'rah [6288] - branches with foliage, ornamentation. Also: פָּארוּר - pa'rur [6289] - to glow, to become red, is very well explainable from the way God appeared to Moses, announcing His salvation and covenant.
Without this context the relationship between these varied words and meanings was very hard to see!

he Written Language of Abraham, Moses and David

By the way, do you share my amazement about the striking similarity between the Menorah and the original samekh/sin? Both have a central 'trunk' with on each side three branches (in the Menorah they are bent upwards to carry the lamps; in the letter they are straight for simplicity). Both served for a considerable time as a national symbol of Israel (only relatively recent the so-called 'star of David' with its mystical/occult background [666!] was adopted by the Jews). And the seven (fullness!) burning lights on top the Jerusalem Temple Menorah clearly reflected or symbolized God's continuous presence there. In the recent history of the resurrected state of Israel also the palm tree (almost always pictured with 7 fronds – three fronds on each side and one in the middle as shown in the picture; only incidentally with 6 fronds on each side and none in the middle, so 12 in total) has been revived again as symbol on memorial coins.

ך Concerning the word מָכָר

- samekh, this can either be interpreted as the date palm (remember: fresh, ripe dates have 60% sugar content and are ri blessing / giving strength [again; in a dry and tiring climate!], or the date palm giving a lot of power [again], or many palm trees [around one's house] being a sign of authority.
The Ugaritic cuneiform (of Semitic origin as well) knew two symbols with an s-sound: sand S. Both show similarity with the palm tree; the first is a crude, simplified presentation, about the second symbol one notes that on both sides of a central trunk, three 'branches' have been drawn, just like in the pictographic original.
Chinese had a similar symbol as well: 丰 (old shapes: sealscript: ,
; oracle bones a.o.:). This represents a (for the Chinese unknown) flourishing plant in the soil, and stood also for flourishing, fertility and riches. Here too, there is, in combination with the symbol for a knife, a link with writing.
This seems surely related in origin. Also related seems the Chinese symbol 王 (old shapes:
and) which represents all that is related to the emperor or highest godhead. It appears a.o. in the symbol for emperor or highest authority or godhead: 皇 (which puts together 白 — a great, pure, white light atop the 王); a symbol that we encountered earlier already as part of the Chinese name of the Phoenix: Fenghuang: 鳳凰… With a small extra stroke in it we get: 玉 - the Chinese symbol for jade, a gem with the color of the fronds of many palm trees! Remarkable as well I consider the parallel with the oldest variant of the Chinese symbol 氣 - qi [chi/tshi], being:
(so, looking strongly like the Greek variant of the : Ξ). This is the symbol for life energy. The Chinese symbool 手 - shiou is originally a hand with five fingers and seems not to be related. However, in combination with one of the above symbols we get: 拜 — to humbly bow oneself down, to be obedient.

!– A study of the pictographic roots and basic notions underlying the earliest Biblical script

'A / 'ainu / 'ayin & ghan / ghainu / ghayin
The original 'ayin (ainu/aynu) is, despite the variations, fortunately rather clear again; it was a picture of an eye, representing the basic notion of vision; to see as well as to see to (i.e. care for), or to oversee. That is the primary meaning as well; derived from that are meanings like: to see, to see to, seer, to watch, insight. Phonetically the ayin is a voiced old:
pharyngeal fricative; to our ears it often sounds like the continental European vowel a (aw) or a short o as in log, though with a soft throat h-like sound attached to it.
What complicates the ayin according to some is that next to the 'ayin originally there existed a harder variant: ghan/ghayin (gh or ġ ; softer than the chet). In a number of Hebrew words that now contain an 'ayin, this originally was this variant ghayin. Though there is a variant:
difference in sound, so far I did not encounter a clear original symbol other than
. For

the difference in meaning I looked especially at word meanings in Arabic, which still distinguishes the غ - ghayin as a separate letter next to the ع - ‘ayin (Ugaritic did so too).40
What appears there is that the غ - ghayin seems to represent the notion of surrounding or covering. Some examples: غم - ghamma - to cover or sheathe something totally41 and from there: غمذ - ghamada - to ins (e.g. a sword in a sheath), غامر - ghāmir - to surround others like the first water (the worldwide flood), that is: to flood all (also without the ’aleph: to flood, to put under water / to cover with water), غل - ghal or the emphasis by doubling of it: غلغل – ghalghala - (to surround a stick or man): insert, to penetrate, to immerse oneself in, and غور - ghaur – to penetrate deeply (lit.: to sheathe one’s ‘pin’ in/with the other person). This notion of sheathing is graphically well represented by the symbol (thereby the notion and the symbol stand close to that of the
- teth). We are still talking then about what one sees at the outside, as with the ‘ayin, though here it is mostly something not seen anymore because it is sheathed, covered or concealed. So it seems to be merely a variation in sound and meaning letter gamma; for example in the city name Gomorrha: Γόμορρα for the Hebrew עֲמוֹרָה - ‘amorāh – originally very likely ghamorāh (in line with the meaning of this as a place, covered in ruins and no longer visible, because of polytheism and/or where the phallus was worshipped a lot).
In the form of the later ע - ‘ayin (and especially in the cursive form of it:) we see also a clear relation with the small (cursive) Greek letter γ - gamma.
The Paleo form is a simplification, as is the Greek o-mikron O and o-mega Ω and our O.
The full word עין - ‘ayin - can be interpreted as the attentive eye you give to your children (you watch them carefully). It can also be seen as derived (shortened) from מעין - ma‘yan (4599) (water - look - He/it g the word, next to ‘eye’).
In other pictographic scripts like old Chinese, the eye was often depicted as:
. Its current Chinese pronunciation is yan - 眼 – pretty similar to ‘ayin. The symbol there represented the sun (the light of which makes everything visible). In that conttext it is remarkable that the Egyptian sungod Ra‘ or Re‘ (Hebr.: רע(in Egyptian hieroglyphs script was represented by the same symbol:
, and that his name in W-Semitic was written as
- the god ‘sun’ / the god who makes us see.
Remarkable in Hebrew is that many words with an ’aleph in them exist also with an ‘ayin at the same location. The meanings are often somewhat related. Only the word with the ’aleph has something of authenticity and trustworthiness or integrity in it while the word with the ‘ayin seems more directed to outward appearance, to the public eye (or as ghayin to conceal from that public eye). This difference is striking for the meanings of the ’aleph and ‘ayin: the ’aleph then represents the first, the authentic, and the ‘ayin the counterfeit – made for the eye / as an image, for the outward appearance. Take the example of the words אור - ’ór = (great) light and עור - ‘ór = skin. God Himself is enrobed in a great light (אור - ’ór - cf. His shining Face as the first (א(secure (ו(face of an Other (ר(, like the sun every morning). Since we stepped out of that light in Genesis 3, we became naked and have to cover ourselves in a garment of skin or other cloth (עור - ‘ór) and thereby protect (ו(us against the eye / the on-looking (ע(of the other (ר(.

40 Akkadian cuneiform did not have a separate letter for it in their script (borrowed from the Sumerians), but the existence of ghayin is also attested in Akkadian, with similar words as taken here from the Arabic. For details, see e.g.: Gary A. Rendsburg, Aaron D. Rubin, John Huehnergard, ‘A Proper View of Arabic, Semitic, and More’ (also here), Jl of the American Oriental Society, Vol. 128, No. 3 (Jul. - Sep.), 2008, pp.

533-541; and ref. 15 in there. They mention a.o. the root Gh-L-P (Akkadian: ghalāpu, Arabic ghallafa, Ugaritic GhLP, Hebrew 5968עלף]]) - ‘to cover, wrap’ - literally: to wrap a stick in an opening/hole.

So: covering the entire gamma ! It is not unthinkable that the original notion under the early Greek gamma is especially that of the ghayin. It might be possible that the old name was not ghayin but gam.

The Written Language of Abraham, Moses and David

Pu / pi / pei /peh

The elementary notion of an opening for airflow like the nose or mouth, an open space and the airflow associated to both, is the basis of the symbol pu – later: peh or pei. It also has a soft variant: phu. In general, the phu is seen as representing open mouth, as the word פֶּה- peh still is mouth in Hebrew. However, when we look at the Semitic word אף old: aph , literally: the primary or prominent phu, we observe that this is not the mouth but the nose. This shows that the single letter phu originally represented primarily an opening for airflow, more than a mouth. By extension, it may represent any other opening (open place, or ‘here’, as פה - po), dilatation, widening or corner/edge, and the verbs to blow (esp. of wind!) or to drive apart / disperse (e.g. of cattle, creating an opening variant?: in the middle). From the verb ‘to blow’ the phu can also represent wind, breadth or even speech. Most likely the original symbol pu was a picture of an opening between two pieces of tent cloth (through which the wind was blowing).42 The old symbol I pictured earlier with the gam – here as last – could be a pu as well.

unclear: Here on the left two old symbols that have been mentioned as the original. Sometimes it was also pictured simply as two parallel lines: | |. The Paleo-form of the symbol seems to fit better with the first old variant (some see a thin flag in the wind), as does the Greek Pi Π (here, too, the | |), which is seen as derived from the pu, as is the phi Φ and our P (again by mirroring the Paleo-form, and closing the opening).

With respect to sound the hard p, and especially the soft variant ph of the phu fit very well with the notion of airflow or wind; the hard variant especially at its start (e.g. when a tent canvas was getting somewhat loose).

A lot of wind/airflow is needed to light up a fierce fire to melt metal, or to forge, weld, or purify it. We recognize this in a word like פזז - pazaz [6338] - to purify metal. The finest metal was פז - paz [6337] purified or pu

In the Bible, the words yad and peh appear a.o. in Job 21:5, where Job parallels:

Turn to me and be amazed, and lay your hand (yad) on your mouth (peh).

A very significant use of the letter pei/phu = mouth/breath we find in the last word of Psalm 34: 1; which is ' בְּ פִ be-p-i – in my mouth/breath; prefix be - in, suffix i - my, and the letter pei: mouth/ breath/opening. That even the small word פֶּה– peh [6310] not only denotes ‘mouth’ but any sort of opening or gap, we see a.o. in Genesis 42: 27; 43: 21; and 44: 1; where it signifies the opening of the bags of the brothers of Joseph.

Benfey's Sanskrit-English Dictionary says va is ‘to blow’ (as the wind). In the Old Chinese script the mouth was depicted as:

or:

. The notion of ‘opening for airflow’ I did not look up there yet.

42

According another vision the pu descended from the second symbol above and originally represented ‘border’. This notion could match somewhat with the picture of two parallel lines and the idea of an opening or gap between pieces of tent cloth, as well as support the later Paleo-form. But in the words formed with the pu, I do not recognize the ‘border’ notion very clearly.

Tsa / tsad / tsade / tsadi / tsaddiq

The origin of the tsade (tsadi/tsad) is much debated and at first seemed somewhat difficult to extract. Therefore, I wil of meanings in literature: the sign on the far left (and variants, still easily recognizable in old:
the Paleo-Hebrew shape) with the meaning: plant (maybe papyrus or reed), and the sign to the right, with the assumed meanings: lying, hunting man, lasso/trap, or path towards a goal. I will come back to this later.
Some clarity is provided by the word for tree, as being a ‘seen’ (respected or well-visible) plant:
- ets.43 The later Phoenician variant of this letter indicates what kinds of plants are meant in particular, as they named it after the papyrus. In the oldest pictographic Sumerian script (early on, Semitic and Sumerian had a profound influence on each other) there was the symbol - še, representing (the ear of) grain.44 Runic alphabets or futharks unclear: had a symbol equal to the middle figure, meaning sedge or protection, (with a sound similar to modern x, z, zs or Turkish ç – all not to far from tsade).
Investigating more Hebrew and other Semitic words beginning with a tsade, showed that this letter probably represented a water-loving, straight up growing plant, like papyrus, reed, grain (esp. barley or wheat), sedge, or cotton. In the desert one was happy to see some of these plants, for then one had found water. Walking amidst them squeezed water from the earth or clay below. Even if the water level was too low, you could extrude some water from the plants. Together with the mem - water the tsade stands for thirst (what you feel when a lot of water is extruded out of you). Papyrus to write on was created by squeezing or extruding water out of the inside or marrow of the papyrus stems (hence maybe also the link with the color white). Dried woven reed or sedge fibers were used for larger surfaces (think of sunshades, walls and roofs) – linked to ‘to cover’ (probable meanings that I encountered as well). Quite significant is the word 6632צב]] - tsāb a reed/rush/wicke Renowned are the Egyptian vessels made of papyrus stalks. Papyrus, flax, cotton and other plant fibers were used quite early to make coverings as well as ropes for a lasso or trap of some kind.
Nuts from e.g. the chufa sedge (cyperus esculentus; probably ubiquitous in the bronze age Egypt Nile delta), extruded from the watery soil, were used both as human food and as fish bait (hence, possibly, the connotation to fish hunting amidst the reeds!). I do not exclude that a thick hollow stem of some of such plants was used to make a kind of cylinder or tube (or by means of a process analogous to the production of paper) – linked to words for to lay down and to roll –, and such a tube may be used as a blowpipe (or a tough stem to make a bow) (in order to extrude the wav as an arrow or dart), from which the connotation with hunting and ‘shooting away fast’ is immediately clear as well. Also, the tsade words related to oppression are well explainable from the pressing or squeezing needed to extrude water or oil from a plant, seed or nut.

In Sumerian:
- ĝiš or ĝeš = tree. The usually supposed pronunciation of this with a [sh] sound on the end is a reconstruction. Personally I suspect that this was more like [tsh] (Akkadian: a.o. ets, itsu). The start sound [ĝ] makes it likely that the ‘ayin, beginning the West-Semitic form, may well have been originally the variant ghayin. The final sound of the Sumerian ĝiš can be regarded, there too, from the
- še - (ear of) grain (source: D.A. Foxfog – see next note). In Akkadian tsutsû was a swamp, moor or forest of reeds (or coppice or other upshoot of twigs or bushes).

The Written Language of Abraham, Moses and David

The plant name צאל - tse’el [6628] is a wild lotus (lotus silvestris) growing at places where wild animals often hindered access to them (a.o. hippopotamuses or dinosaurs on the shore of the Nile – cf. Job 40: 21) – therefore, and because of its beauty literally: the plant of God.
From all of the above I strongly believe that the tsade originally was an image of a reed- or wheatlike plant, also the to extrude liquid (water, juice, oil) out of something by pressing, squeezing or sucking’.
Various words illustrate this meaning quite clearly, such as the root מ צ ץ - matsats [4711] water extruded from the pla and צ ח ָנ - netsach [5332] - juice (what comes forth from the flesh of a plant or fruit). (I suspect that in some words the samekh and tsade have become confused, as in 2-/6071ס ׳ עס]].) When we get warm, we often sweat (i.e. extrude water out of the skin) on our forehead: [4696]מצח . Arabic still has a word صوح - tsawwach - to dry (out) (completely; bone & flesh/skin). Nice is also the root of Arabic صهر - tsahara – ‘pressed together to rejoice in the other’ – to melt, fuse or to be or become related by marriage. The ‘parched place’ Zion - 6- – 6724|וי‘צ]] - lit.: ‘the result of presswork with a stick’ – in Arabic (صهيون(has an extra ah/hey – there it’s apparently holy/ worship-worthy presswork . It can also be related to flourishing, as the flowers come forward from a ‘branch’ of a ‘stick in the ground’ (see tsuts/tsits in Table 2).
Also the tsade words related to oppression can well be explained from the pressing or squeezing needed to extrude water or other liquids, such as oil, from a plant, seed or nut.
The lying figure symbol may well be a picture of a plant stem with a drop of liquid at the end.

The sound of the tsade just fits the kind of plants just discussed, as they rustle in the wind, and with the sound of squeezing them out or pressing of liquid out of something as well: tsss…

The words צו - tsav [6673] and צוה - tsavah [6680] (from which mitswah) I consider related to the grain harvest, where grain stalks were connected ( ) or bound into sheaves to ripen; the main significance being the aspect of being brought together in unity and in worship to God. The word צו in the mysterious text of Isaiah.28: 10 and 13 has been seen as a spelling exercise, indicating that the original name of the letter was tsu or tsav rather than tsa, or as referring to bindings, “binding to binding, rope to rope…”. The Septuagint confirms this (“θλιψιν επι θλιψιν …”), and it fits well in the context. This makes a מ צ וְה

- mitswah not so much a commandment but more a sign of having been united / bound together in joyful worship (like sheaves in the grain harvest).

An illustrative tsade word is what you might have shouted when you saw an adder had just bitten the hand/arm of your child (a child’s hand or arm being one of the most likely spots an adder would bite a human): “suck out [the poison from] the opening seen on the child’s hand/arm!” Right; that cry spells:

- 6848 צפעני]] - tsiph‘oniy – a word (or must I say: yell?) for “adder!” 46

By the way, the association between reed, sedges and papyrus on the one hand and sucking r squeezing out on the other, can be found elsewhere in the Hebrew language as well, as in the root גמא - gome’/gama’ [1572/-3] – reed, sedges, papyrus and to suck out, to drink (after the old symbols:

- something that stood with its feet in water).

מ֫ - matsah [4682], that is:

Noteworthy with respect to what the tsade stood for is also the word צ ה

- plain bread: made from water ( ) and grain ( ) to enjoy/live from ( ).

Some have thought that the tsade has two or even three origins, and do not see a relationship between צור - tsur as ‘to makes this clear, as it signifies binding another (or oppress him with a tent pin, to limit his movement; as you might do with cattle, put them on a rope on a tent pin, such that they cannot run away 47). This ‘limitation of movement’ can be seen as a good description of the most significant characteristic of a big rock: that it ‘cannot move’; it is ultimately steady. Alternatively, one can see this as a very strongly compressed, ‘squeezed out’ matter, connected to God (in antiquity God was often worshipped on mountains, so a big rock was a place where the bond with God was experienced most vividly).

Confusion between tsade and teth may have arisen out of baskets/covers ( ) made of -stalks.

In the Bible, the full word tsad (standing for ‘side’; with possible readings: ‘the reed goes in’ (to the water, at the border or side of it), ‘the reed moves’ - implying it is pushed aside, reed on the side of a river, ‘the pressing/extruding movement’ exerted on the side of a plant or so, or ‘pressing the door’ [with

This is related to my explanation of ‘echad - originally wachad – lit.: ‘the pin on the doorpost (i.e. on which the door hinges)’, which is stable, amidst the continuous moving of the door; hence: steady/stable, not volatile; hence: ‘one’, single-minded; also in view of Exodus 21: 6 : ‘with an awl on the door-post’, forever loyal; in Akkadian ‘slave’ was warad – in the old Semitic script represented by your side]) appears a.o. in Yesha-Yahu 66:12 – and even there with an association to being pressed upon and a close association to sucking nearby:

- ‘pin on the other’s door’.

For so says YaHUaH, Behold, I will hold out peace to her like a river, and the glory of the nations like a flowing stream. Then you will suck, you will be carried on her side (or hip) and be dandled upon her knees.
The tsade is sometimes also named tsaddiq [6662] – righteous one. The two notions are rather close, for the purely straight up growing grain or reed plant (without twistings or kinks, branches or crookedness), that simply shines as gold in/as the sun (Mat. 9: 37-38; 13: 24-43) and bears fruit in manifold is an important model for the upright one.

Qu / quph / qoph

old:

The quph (later: qoph) was not trivial either and required some more investigation as well.
One of the oldest symbols is the left variant here, which appears to depict a sun on the horizon. The many connotations with ‘East’ denote that it refers to the rising sun. Many words in which the qoph appears are indeed related to the basic notion of a rising motion, an alternation of going up and down or a circulation (as the orbit of the sun), or a circle. An associated notion is: to be small or low/humbly or to grow from that to great, as the rising sun begins small and low before coming great and intense. ‘To go up in flames’ and ‘to smell’ (pleasant or unpleasant) are two other meanings that sometimes are associated to the letter quph; especially to the quph-dalt combination (
- up-going
movement of the rising sun - with warmth and light / rising movement, as of flames). The association with becoming light or with fire is thus encountered.
Some scholars regard the later Paleo-Hebrew quph as a stick with a rope attached to it (or in miniature also a needle and thread); I suppose this refers to the word quph, written as – what rises from a tent pin – that is a guy-line – and forms an opening/loop/strap (on which you could tie a tent, but an animal as well; an alternative explanation is that of a guy-rope against the wind). Next to the original meaning of rising sun and rising movement the quph then gets the additional connotation ‘rope on a stick’ or ‘needle and thread’ and also: ‘eye of that needle’ (or even the hole in the blade of an axe).

The notion of encircling or revolving is recognized in words such as קוף – quph and נקף - naqap, - to go around, compass, and תקופה - tekupha - a coming around, circuit of space or time, revolution, season, and הקפה - hakafa - encircling, surrounding. Klein reports that the root verb קוף covers a circular motion and that it also serves to denote the ear of an axe or needle (or the back of the head).
The idea that the letter quph/qoph originally represented an ape (a meaning of the word quph/ qoph) is not right; this word is a loanword from India or Egypt.49
Our Q/q goes clearly back to the old Semitic qoph, as did the old Greek Qoppa - Ϙ / ϙ.
Illustrative of the formation of words is qanu (qanah) - a hollow stick or tube. When a sprouting seed of wheat or reed ‘comes up’ (& lives) , a (living) hollow stalk is exactly what you get indeed.
English words like cane, canister, canon and cannon seem to be derived from it (partly via the Greek).
In old Chinese pictograms the rising sun was depicted as:

(also serving as ideogram for morning).

Concerning the association between ‘rising’/‘ascending’ and burning/sacrificing/worshipping: compare the Jewish altar-names עולה זבח
מ and זבח קטרת
מ - of ‘ascendance’, i.e. go up in smoke, and of incense – that also went upward in smoke.

The Written Language of Abraham, Moses and David

Ra / raisu / resh

One of the last notions in this list is that of a (higher) other or The Other (God). The raisu (resh) symbolizes this by picturing the head of a man (ראש - rosh still is a head in old:

Hebrew; almost all other Semitic and many African languages have parallel words like ras, rash, or rasu for a higher other or leader and many cultures knew a godhead Ra ‘ or Re‘50). In the pictures there is a lot of variation, as illustrated here on the left (the last two variants are influenced by Egyptian drawings; the lower one is an early form supposedly representing a typical Egyptian haircut51); apparently everybody just drew a head to his own liking. The meaning is: man, but especially: the other or a (higher) other, often God (concerning the ‘higher’: compare the old root ram, as in Abh-ram – exalted/high father). From the old Semitic it is understandable that the word resh represents first, higher, top, etc., for can well be read as: [allow] the other first to eat (what one typically did with a higher one – see Luke 17: 7-8), or more likely: the Other Who comes forward prominently, which clearly refers to God, or the other with the first well/spring (generally the highest person of the region).

Often, confusion between or development from the r to the l (or vice versa) phonemically explained; the above shows that an explanation from the closeness of the meanings is possible as well, because the notions under these two letters can be very similar.

A challenging word seemed the Hebrew טרף - tāraph – to pluck off (to eat leaves from a tree; specially fresh green ones), to devour (one animal by another) / tereph – booty, food, prey / tārēph – to be satisfied. So, the central notion is that of a great quantity of food.

The old form is:

. In first instance I thought of rather complicated explanations needing to see the resh more broadly than the higher Other (mostly God!). Later I saw that this simply depicts: to open ( ) the basket ( ) (with food) of that higher one / of God ( ).52 The Arabic words ثرف - taraf / turfa - luxury / tarifa - to live in luxury, seem to affirm this. The same root appears to be also at the basis of the Arabic ثرع - tari‘a - to be or become full / to fill (especially of a bowl or basket!) (old:

- to see the basket of God or the higher one, which apparently will be well-filled). About the opposite of this wealth you get when you screen/hide that basket of God: טרח/ח / ثرح - taricha/tarach - (to experience) sorrow, trouble (old:

טוֹר - tārach/torach

- the basket of God is screened).

According to Klein our word ‘race’ is derived from resh.

The Paleo form has been abstracted and simplified radically, and is easily confused with the daleth (the most important difference being the somewhat longer ‘stick’ below right and the resh often inclining a little more to the left). The square script form ר and the Greek and Latin forms – Greek rho P and our capital R – are easily identified as being related to the Paleo-Hebrew simplification, Greek and Latin again in mirrored form. In the square script form the easy confusion with the daleth is still there.

In Hebrew written as רע – in the old script:

- so: the god who makes us see. Indeed: in Egypt and elsewhere Ra‘ was often identified with the sun, pictured as

51

It is possible as well that the back of the head of the godhead is chosen here on purpose; compare how Moses could only see God from behind.

52

The tet here might possibly be interpreted, not only as a basket, but also as picture of the firewood under a sacrifice (torn-apart parts of an animal).

An alternative though less likely association of the word טרף is ‘hull, given by God, lying open’ (as with an animal being devoured / ripped apart). Alternatively, it can be seen as ‘hull from God for the nakedness after the gap’, related to the gap that human distrust had caused between man and God (Gen.3), resulting in man feeling sacrifice (rip apart) an animal. I do not exclude that at an early instance contamination took place with a form beginning with a zayin, where the notion of cutting enforced that of devouring / tearing apart.

The agreement in words demonstrates that in Arabic, next to the letter ط - tet, also the ث - tha (sometimes) corresponds as regards its origin often associated with the Hebrew shin.

!– A study of the pictographic roots and basic notions underlying the earliest Biblical script

Sha / shad/thad / shadu / shin

The origin of the later Hebrew letter שׁ shin proves of all letters one of the most difficult to retrieve. A loot of discussion has been going on about it. Here on the left four early symbols are given below the Paleo there are people who think that to be the original meaning as well (Benner modifies the old shapes to the rectangular/edgy s in order to be able to maintain this proposition). However, I cannot see a picture of a tooth or teeth in any of the old inscriptions found in archeological excavations and neither o or original wild ox (ra’am), a snake, a big cloud(cover) or even the sun.

old:

What attracts attention is that the Hebrew shin corresponds to two letters in some other Semitic languages, such as Arabic. In the notions present in words formed with the shin I also see two main groups. Though my diligent study of this symbol in its shape and context isn’t finished yet, I consider it likely that originally, we are dealing here with two or three symbols that in later Hebrew merged into one alphabet letter. There is now general agreement among scholars that the Hebrew shin phoneme represents a merger of two phonemes in earlier (2nd millennium BC) West-Semitic: the sh and the th.54 In Arabic and some other Semitic languages, still two letters are present (i.e. shin and ta) that are represented in Hebrew by the single letter shin. Some more insight is gained here from Ugaritic cuneiform, closely related to the West-Semitic. Its script had 30 signs. The prime Ugaritic equivalent of West-Semitic is

- t/th (thanna). It seems related to Arabic ث - t/th - ta. It had two variants that were very much alike:

- š/sh (shin) and

- d (dal; all three incorporating the big, breast-like g sign; the dal not to be confused with the equivalent of Semitic - daleth, being:

delta; derived from a picture of a big gate or pair of doors).

In various old symbolic presentations of it one can easily recognize two motherly breasts. One variant could thus be a p

(= breast(s); cf. Arabic ta). The correspondence between Ugaritic th and West-Semitic

, combined with the ancient thad - breasts in various early Semitic sources55 affirms the idea that the

-sign could well represent a drawing of a pair of breasts and its earliest old Semitic name was likely shad or thad. One of the meanings of the Hebrew word shad is feminine breast, nipple. Possibly the word dad which I earlier interpreted as an image of two breasts could etymologically as well be a degeneration of thad (though cf. also dod - beloved, and dudaim - dates or 'love apples' for their sensual appetite & fertility enhancing effect). (In one of the very old Wadi el-Hol inscriptions Brian E. Colless sees a similar shape:

as thad - breast; knowing that both shin and daleth are close to th in sound, this is not strange either; I see this thad as an early variant of

).56 Compare the English word

tit as well.

A very important notion that we encounter in ש-words is that of a well or source that wells up an abundant (bulging) measure of water or any other drink or food or that brings forth warmth, nourishment or fullness. So, coupled to the above interpretation of the symbols as motherly breasts are the notions of bulging from fullness, and a well of water or of life. What a well/ water source is for a grown-up person, the motherly breast is for the infant (refreshing, satisfying when dehydrated, nourishing, etc.). Both were vital for life. That of a bulging source of nourishment, drink (food), warmth and fullness is indeed a most vital notion. It is reflected in this symbol shin, or rather shad or thad, by what I see as a drawing of a pair of bulging female (motherly) breasts. Note that Arabic ث)t/th - ta) still looks like contents in a sack that makes that sack bulge, or somewhat like a single breast with nipple drawn in, while it also seems graphically related to the nun – the offspring that is

54

A very informative article on this is: Yigal Bloch, 'On Some Alleged Developments of the Proto-Semitic Phoneme /t/ In Iron Age Canaanite Dialects' Journal of Semitic Studies, LIII/1, Spring 2008. He discusses a.o. the Proto-Semitic root yt'. - to save, represented in Hebrew with shin as ישׁע – yš' (here transliterated as: ysh').

55

Remarkably, in Arabic two forms of the word for female breast or udder are left: ثدى thady and ثدن thadan -literally: my breast and the baby's breast, respectively. One might also say that apparently, they are to be touched only by the hand ( ) [of the woman herself or her husband (or the farmer, in the case of the udder)] and by the baby / the young (offspring;), respectively.

56

See also the comment on Proverbs 5:19 by Keil & Delitzsch' Biblical Commentary on the Old Testament.

It is remarkable, how many fertility related idols (goddesses) in old Middle Eastern cultures, often depicted with big c by a resh - 'the higher other' (god).

nurtured. Like the nun as a seed signified the result or the life coming forth, the shin seems to signify the source of that life bringing it forth (what produces life or at least what nourishes to make life possible).

I see this illustrated in words such as

- shor [8270] - source of life from another person – umbilical cord, navel (note the parallel with drink or refreshment in Proverbs 3: 8; this root is also used for the vine, feeding the tendrils and grapes);

- sha'ab - a well of a prominent house; which became: 'to draw water'; or

- sheresh/shoresh [8328-8330] - root.

In Biblical Hebrew language, the link between feminine breasts and the wife in general on the one hand and that of a source, well or fountain on the other, we find very clearly e.g. in Proverbs 5: 15-21.

Again: both were vital for life. Additionally, like breasts, the shin has the connotation with warmth and fire (also Proverbs 6: 27 and surrounding verses lays the connection between fire and breast(s)).

With respect to the phonetics: The th and sh are typical sounds of an infant suckling on a mother's breast.

The many destruction-related shin-words might well be related to a second old symbol, to be interpreted as a pair of bul auroch (the pictographic likeness is good). The fact that the shin in many of these words is coupled to the 'aleph, makes this interpretation more plausible. The Ugaritic

- sh could be at the basis of this.

It has two upright 'sticks' at a small angle and a symbol g, often representing a circle in the original pictographs (as in the Ugaritic ayin), thus representing an

-like sign. This interpretation could be related to the later Hebrew interpretation of the word shin as a pair of teeth (e.g. elephant's teeth function a bit like bull's horns).

The Hebrew shin would thus be a combination of originally at least two old Semitic symbols: one for breasts and one for ox-horns. The fact that in some other Semitic languages there are (e.g. Arabic) or were (Ugaritic) two or more symbols represented in later Hebrew by the shin, is in agreement with this.

What the horns, the well and the breasts and the milk coming from the breasts all have in common is the notion of something protruding from the body or from the ground or whatever. We also encounter some of this in the n (to/out), to stretch; while also having the connotation of giving (as sharing from fullness, like a well, source or breast does).

The word shen - tooth could be explained as above or as what protrudes ( ) from a child ( )

(around the time of weaning), while it also looks like a young sprout, protruding ( ) from a seed ( ).

Alternatively, it could be derived quite literally and grammatically as 'what comes after breastfeeding'

– eating for which one needs teeth; or: ‘the resource of [weaned] children [who have teeth]’.57 Someone was so kind to direct my attention to the Arabic word قوس - qush - a (shooting) bow, also appearing in Biblical Hebrew as קוּש - qush or qosh - bow, or: to lay a snare; original form probably:
. The combination can be interpreted as: something going up from a tent pin (a line, rope or cord; see my discussion at qoph), and a snare is such a line suddenly emerging (protruding from hiding). What the bow does, is that it sends (lets protrude; ) an arrow ( ) upward (
). By the way, those upward arrows are a sign of might (קוֹ־קוֹ - qav-qav). The wav (a stick with a sharp tip) was also used to denote an arrow or spear.
That puts me on the trail of hunting. Indeed there is an old root
- shud (easy to remember from the verb to shoot) – protruding/sending forth an arrow to move/to go in, that is hunting, and from there another meaning of shad (literally: protruding to move/to go in) is: destruction, violence and power.58 When it is another person at whom the hunt is directed, it becomes
- shadar to battle. However, in some other Semitic languages (e.g. Ugaritic), the verb denoting to shoot is written with a tsade: tsad or tsud ( ) – explainable as: to go into the vegetation, or as: let an arrow (like a reed stalk) go into. It is not unlikely, that this is the origin of the hunting-related words with a shin, assuming confusion between shin and tsade at some early point (possibly in the second half of the second millennium BC when the West-Semitic pictographic script evolved into the Paleo-Hebrew/Phoe/nician alphabet script). The same ts - sh confusion is at the root of the difference between שִׁבֹּלֶת סִבֹּלֶת - shibbolet/sibbolet [7641, 5451], originally with tsade: ear of grain (grain shell/‘house’ ending the stalk), shibbolet from shobel/shibbol [7640-1] - stream/trail (coming forth [as wool] from the tent of a ִסְ - sibhlot (e.g. in Exodus 6:6), from סִבְּלָה - sibbolah [5450] - burden (the palm or shepherd), and בַּל ַ - sabbāl [5449] - a porter, and בֶּל סַ pillar that bears the dwelling of the honored Leader, related to בֶּל סַ sābal [5445] - to bear a burden, be burdensome).

!– A study of the pictographic roots and basic notions underlying the earliest Biblical script
What I noted about the multiple sources of shad I find quite remarkable in connection to the fact that God is named El Shaddai – literally: God my Shad. Biblically and linguistically He can indeed be associated with great p feeding and cherishing on the other (concerning the latter, see Yesha-Yahu [= Isaiah] 66)! He wants to come in! The more remarkable, because these two are the things people (currently no longer men only!) so intensely long for, and that are so attractive to them: unlimited power and the warmth of a nourishing breast. What these people often – unfortunately – do not know, is that they in fact long for El Shaddai – the only true God, and for His tender love and fierce protection given to us in Yeshu'ah…

Psychologically, nurture/ cherishing ( ) and being ready to move out or protrude ( ) into the world around ( ) appear to follow logically after each other; the former is necessary for the latter. When we take all of this together, the central element of the that emerges is coming forward, bulging or bringing forth. This element is present in the interpretation of motherly breasts, of a well / source of water or life, and in that of cow-horns (as additional meanings have been mentioned:: tooth, to sharp(en), to press, to grind, though I do not recognize those in any way; the assumed meaning 'to press' seems to derive from confusion with the tsade and 'to sharpen' from the sin).

There is some circumstantial evidence that a third original symbol may have represented the sun and the brilliant radiance coming from it. This could be related to the Ugaritic
- d. The Ugaritic g often represents a circle in the original pictographs, and other pictographic scripts denote the sun as a circle with a dot or line in it (as does the qoph, also in Ugaritic). This would explain many radiance related words with a shin (though there is also a relation between radiance and horns in Semitic), like shemesh – the sun itself, as source of much radiance (in reconstructed Proto-Semitic, the first and last letter of shemesh differ, that's why I interpret them differently here too). In Hebrew, the letter d often corresponds to the zayin, also associated with shining (metal) and lighting fire (burning olive oil). The connection between the shin and the sin that seems to exist in the square script, does not seem to have a very material origin. The origin of the sin seems to be related more to that of the samekh in old Semitic and not to the shin. Sin and samekh have been mixed up a lot in the course of history, in quite a number of words. This can be observed clearly still when comparing Hebrew to Arabic where the sh and s are often just exchanged (cf. e.g. Hebr. shalom and Arab. salam and compare Hebr. נשׂא, Biblical Aramaic נשׂא, and Aramaic נסא – to lift up, to carry, to Ugaritic nsh - to lift, and Arabic nasha'a - to grow up (old Semitic: the seeds of the palm trees grow up first!, while 'to lift up' may also derive from '(to take away) the seeds from the palm tree first' – from on high); while the Hebr. נשׂא - to deceive (the deception came after or was brought about by the breasts they [a prostitute] first showed), does not seem to be related).

Interesting is a comparison of the notions under the shin/thad and the sin/samekh respectively: breasts/well/source/to protrude and (date) palm tree. Palm trees often grew/grow near a well or oasis. God is associated with both. Both can supply in an enormous need and provide new energy (see also Song of Songs 7: 8). Both have something almost holy and represent an aspect of intimacy (physical or spiritual).

Another typical shin word is
- shem – name, identity, honor. Literally, it stands for a source of water (i.e. a well), the Source or Horn of abundance. When, in a primitive culture, you have a great well and/or regularly provide water to others, you get a good name, so the link is not that far-fetched. Note that the Jewish way to denote God by שׁם ה - Ha Shem – normally translated as 'the Name' – is at least as validly translatable from its old Semitic origins as: 'praise the Source or Horn of abundance'. This makes an early use of this expression (at the time when the glorious Name of God, YaHUaH, was still regularly used as well) quite likely…

How come
- shemayim and
- shamem, which at first sight both look like a multiple of this source of water, differ so vastly from each other as 'heaven', and 'devastation'? Well, the first - heaven - can be seen in a number of ways: (i) physically as a combination of shin (breast, origin, well) and mayim: the heaven as where the rainwater comes from (cf. Gen.7:11; Deut.11:11); (ii) simply as a multiple: ‘plenty of water wells’, so: ‘no worries anymore’; or (iii) as the place where we will all have names – be known and recognized personally for who we really are – and know God intimately (cf. e.g. Revel be seen as deriving from a second root – e.g. the horns of the auroch, or violently protruding waters yielding a lot of destruction. Or it may be seen, in conjunction with the shin as source or well, as simply referring to a great flood (occurring occasionally, even in desert lands!) that can drown livestock, wipe out all food crops and make even drinking wells unusable for a considerable period of time! Now talk about devastation or desolation! 59

In this context it is significant what Maspero wrote in his enormous work about the Euphrates and Tigris – that important ‘source area’ of the Semites:

ְשִׁשָׁ - shēsh/shishāh (8337) - ‘six’ equals
Is there a relationship with our symbol ‘3’? The fact that ה/ששׁ 2x3, makes me suspect that such could well be the case…
The Paleo shape of the letter is simplified for ease of writing. The Greek sigma Σ is clearly related, only rotated 90o (the original thad often was rotated 90o as well with the two points facing right; the Greek version then is the regular mirrored version of this); the place in the alphabet is that of the samekh.
In the Old Chinese script was a symbol for a well or fountain; this might well be related (compare especially the 1st and 3rd old form). Another old Chinese symbol that might perhaps be distantly related is the sign for rain:
. The upper part of this, where the rain apparently comes from (the source of the rain), shows vague likeness to the old Semitic shad-/shin-symbol (upside down; but orientation was not considered essential at first).
My eye still fell on the likeness between the Semitic root shi:
with the Chinese radical shi, shih or sī: 糸 or 糸 modern simplified: 纟 (sometimes doubled), not so much in shape (though graphically the upper part of the modern variant looks much like a post-Babyloniian Hebrew shin), but as regards meaning and pronunciation – the two sounding almost equally. Both stand for silk (of the silk worm) (see). At least a very remarkable parallel, which likely denotes a later borrowing (so also Fürst, p.877 to be excluded, when we consider that silk was at first produced in China only and when we look at the older variants of the Chinese sign.60

“They are subject to annual floods, which occur when the winter snow melts on the higher ranges of Armenia. The Tigris, which rises from the southern slope of the Niphates and has the more direct course, is the first to overflow its banks, which it does at the beginning of March, and reaches its greatest height about the 10th or 12th of May. The Euphrates rises in the middle of March, and does not attain its highest level till the close of May. From June onwards it falls with increasing rapidity; by September all the water which has not been absorbed by the soil has returned to the river-bed. The inundation does not possess the same importance for the regions covered by it, that the rise of the Nile does for Egypt. In fact, it does more harm than good, and the river-side population have always worked hard to protect themselves from it and to keep it away from their lands rather than facilitate its access to them; they regard it as a sort of necessary evil to which they resign themselves, while trying to minimize its effects.”

In old variants of Chinese the 𠂤is depicted as: , or (Seal script/Dàzhuàn, Jinwen, Jiaguwen respectively) – a picture o

Chinese character and the Old South Arabian

By the way, the current Chinese 𠂤(shi) symbol has two parts; the meaning of both the upper and the lower part is: ‘small’, which does not seem to be associated with the meaning of the Semitic or Hebrew symbols. This enforces my impression that we are dealing simply with a borrowed word here.

Ta / tav

The tav typically represents the notion of a closure, an end and the completion of the aleph-beth. This cross sign stands for a sign, a mark, a cross, or a signature (incl. the connotation: settlement/fixation), writing(s) (tavah - to write is a form of celebrating tav’s - signs of security and bonding; something written down was secure), or for to mark, or old:

to press. As suffix it denotes that a word is an abstraction or variant of something else or a drawn or sculpted object (also the feminine plural is formed with a tav). The sound is that of a tap with a hammer on a chisel – the way to write in stone. Sometimes the tav symbol literally/physically and simply stands for two crossed sticks or any construction. The tavsound is that of ticking on a

The later Paleo variant is rotated slightly. In the Greek tau T (/τ) and Latin T (/t) variants the upper part of the vertical line is short or even left out completely. In the square script ת tav it is hard to recognize the original cross sign.

Tav (תו (as word exists of two signs:

– the tav-sign itself and the wav – elementary: the sharp pointy stick with which one could engrave such signs in a rock or stone surface. In addition, the word tav also stands for ‘(cross)sign of secure belonging/bonding’. This tav (תו /) as a sign from God is Biblically very significant: the BDB dictionary has for the tav: mark (as a sign of exemption from judgment)! We encount translation); and in Ezekiel 9: 4-6, where we read:

4 And YaHUaH said to him [the cherub], Go through in the midst of the city, in the midst of Jerusalem, and set a tav (cross-mark) on the foreheads of the men who are groaning and are mourning because of all the abominations that are done in her midst. 5 And He said to those in my hearing, Go over in the city after him, and strike. Let not your eye spare, nor have pity. 6 Fully destroy old men, young men and virgins, and little children and women. But do not come near any man on whom is the tav (cross-mark). And begin at My sanctuary. And they began at the old men who were before the house.

Another typical tav word is 8549 ,8552תם ' תמ)) - tamam/tamiym – the final sign of abundance of abundance (or: of abundances - plural); that is according to the BDB dictionary: to be complete, be finished, be at an end; also referring to perfection.

Very significant is the tav in the word Torah - 8451תורה)) - literally: (cross) sign of secure belonging from the Other Who is to be joyfully worshipped, or: a-(cross)-sign-of-secure-belongingfrom-the-Other that is means! It's a sign of Love to be joyfully accepted, and a source of vibrant and flourishing community Life! Remarkable I find the similarity in sound and symbols with the blowing of the ram's horn, as sign, from YaHUaH, the God of secure attachment, Who sees to or gives vision for real life in worship towards Him.

- 8643תרועה)) - teruah –

Together the 'aleph and tav stand for either 'the first sign' of something, or for something that is complete, full, a complete whole (compare our expression: 'from A to Z'). This short word appears frequently in the Bible, amongst others already in Genesis 1: 1, where I believe it says that God created the entire heaven and the entire earth, so: as emphasizing the fullness of the direct object.

Even the development into that accusative use of

can be explained from the old symbols, for the

(tav) was more often used to denote a material thing, such that made something into a significant object (this thing; a specific or 'direct' object). By the way, the little word

/ את has many meanings, of which most come forth from dropping one or more other symbols. A very physical meaning is derived from the

as cross beam, that is a construction, pulled by an ox

: a plow or something like that [855] (probably a wav got lost here). From / את in the sense of closeness [854] an original nun was lost; originally it was / אנת - a sign to value one's children as being primary/important, and so: to be with them (see also Fürst, p. 168).

Some see in

also a reference to Jesus: the First and Last / the Prominent One on the cross. They say that appears about 7000 times in the First Testament and especially there where Jesus was actually involved. I see something like this as possibly a nice extra connotation, definitely not as the basic meaning.61

In Bible-exposition the rabbi's often discern four layers, where the first is the most important one, etc: (1) what is meant literally (Peshat), (2) a (possibly spiritual) application/interpretation of that (Remez), (3) a further unraveling with the aid of other passages about the same thing (Derāsh), (4) a secret/hidden message of God (Sod; this entire system is called PaRDeS – paradise/orchard). Seeing this kind of 'extra's' in the text, then belongs in that 4th layer, while reading 'et as literally: whole/entire belongs to layer (1). Though they can be very compelling, in general I am rather reserved concerning interpretations at layer (4) (where some Jews often introduce the occult qabbalah etc.) while I concentrate more on the higher layers (1)–(3), especially at (1).

That God finishes and completes everything with the cross is a thoroughly Biblical idea, of course. As Christian I find this also a reason to return to the script that I called old Semitic, where the cross was clearly recognizable. In Paleo-Hebrew that was reduced already and in the square script it became totally unrecognizable. No wonder, that the pharisaic/talmudic Jews from Jesus' time here on earth did not recognize His crucifixion as 'of God'!

In Old Chinese, the sign (radical 24) is also a sign for fullness and completion. Additionally, it is said to be a sign for ten (10), though according others, it is originally a sign for seven (7) – the fullness of the week (of creation), and the sign for God Himself. Nelson en Broadberry (see literature) also relate it to an old Chinese pictogram picturing God in a blessing posture; most appropriate for the cross…

In Table 1. on the next page you will find all this systematically summarized with next to the old Semitic signs their r

The available old Semitic sources are limited and because some letters appear relatively infrequently, it is cumbersome to identify them completely correctly. It may be plain that the origin and the meanings of some of the characters are not fully clear yet. Additional research will be needed before we have everything completely clear. Therefore, this document is a living draft working document…

By the way, in this particular case the claim about Jesus' presence is contradicted by e.g. 1 Samuel 13:2, where the little word את appears 5 times and in at least 2 meanings in one sentence, in a situation where the people had clearly left God.

!– A study of the pictographic roots and basic notions underlying the earliest Biblical script

Old Hebrew words and their meanings

The first words and observations that I encountered intrigued me to reconstruct a meaning of a large number of words from the old Semitic pictograms (or ideograms). Such an analysis has its limits. Not all Hebrew (or Aramaic) words can be interpreted this way: certainly not the grammatically derived forms, often with pre- or suffixes, forms from which other letters have disappeared (in particular let1 ters like the wav often disappeared), onomatopoeia and borrowed words from other languages. It is also known that sometimes the order of letters has changed or letter replacing/exchanging has occurred (e.g. between yo these limitations, I was perplexed at the large portion of all the words that I encountered that appeared ‘readable’ (wi

The list on the following pages denotes, how a non-educated Israelite between 2000 and 1000 before Christ (roughly: the time of Abraham till David) could possibly have interpreted the words from the Bible, by deriving the meanings from the early basic meanings of the old Semitic symbols that constitute them. This is q evolution or development may have come about differently.

Several words are particularly interesting to analyze, because of the light they shed on the history of Israel. In Israel and surrounding nations/peoples אל - ’El (Akkadian: ilu/elu) was the common word for God/god or an important (first/prime/great) leader. This f symbols. However, when we take the old Semitic symbols a bit more literal, it is immediately clear why people in those days often associated the word ‘god’ with an ox (bull, calf or cow). This corresponds with an older source of the word ’El, which was the name of a Canaanite godhead, often depicted as an ox. Because of its enormous power the great auroch (shoulder height up to 2 meter!) was for long ages a symbol of the higher powers. Al kinds of idols/‘gods’ were often depicted with parts of the body of an ox. In ancient Mesopotamia a recurring figure is the bull-man, gud-alim in Sumerian (note the likeness of the alim = auroch, bull, bison, wild ram to ’Elohim; while gud = domestic ox). One expert argues that this figure emerged especially during the “phase of development which culminated in the structuring of city-based, hierarchical societies”.2 Biblically, that is the time that culminated in the building of the tower of Babel.

These days there are dedicated people who even confess God’s glorious Name YaHUaH, who have trouble using the word ‘God/god’ because it resembles the name of an ancient idol. Instead they rather use the Hebrew (Biblical, they say) denotion ’El. The above shows that this is misled: precisely of ’El it can be stated with certainty that it once was used as the name of an idol.

A bit more elaborated than ’El is אל ה - ’Eloha / ’Elāh / ’Aloha 3 – literally the first great Leader to be worshipped (or the first honorable Leader). The God of Israel used for Himself the form: אל הים - ’Elohim. Many have studied or stumbled over the plural they see in this ’Elohim.

But from the old Semitic the suffix -im is not only to be interpreted as a plural, but also as ‘He gives’

A few remarkable examples of such loanwords are:

פַּרְעֹה - phare‘oh - pharao, from Egyptian pr ‘ 3 - big house* (think of the use of ‘the White House’ as metonym for the presidential government of the USA in our days). For an Israelite in the time of Moses/Mosheh this word looked like: see the ‘blowing’ (authoritative speaking) of the higher other, and worship – precisely what they first had to do towards the pharao and what in the end that pharao had to do towards God.

הֵיכָל - hēikāl, or: הֵיכַל - hēikhal - temple or palace, via Akkadian ekallu derived from Sumerian e2-gal - literally: bi temple was or contained the footstool of God.

Rice, The Power of the Bull, Routledge, London, 1998, p.272; cited in: Renate Marian Van Dijk, The Motif of the Bull in the Ancient Near East: An Iconographic Study , PhD thesis, University of South Africa, febr. 2011; p.68. It must be noted in this context that the great auroch or wild bull of those days could easily handle a lion. Van Dijk also mentions that Mesopotamian kings would often be likened to bulls (p.107) and most early Egyptian kings or pharao’s would be called epithets such as ‘Mighty Bull’ or the like (p.105). Compare also Gen. 49: 22 and Deut. 33: 17 where Joseph is likened to a bull.

This variant appears a.o. in Psalm 30: 13 (with suffix yod = mine). And a lot in the Peshitta – the text of the First Testament written in Syriac Aramaic, used in some Eastern churches. Not to be confused with אל ה - ’allah,

’elah - oak, terebinth. This is the living ( ) form of the strong material from which the better (1st class) shepherd’s sticks and tent pins were made – the word א ו ל - ’ul - strong.

!– A study of the pictographic roots and basic notions underlying the earliest Biblical script

(‘He hands us’:

or

) abundance (

)’; indeed YaHUaH shares His abundance most gracefully…

Other words are most interesting, since their meaning is often hard to understand for our Western minds. An example is the Hebrew word חכמה - chokhmah – wisdom, since it seems so hard to ‘get’ what wisdom is all about. Well, let’s see what the constituting old Semitic symbols tell us. We know that chokhmah is derived from חכם - chakham [2449], it’s the ‘celebrating’ (hillul) or feminine form of it. And חכם - chakham stands for:
- the boundary (-ies) (limit(s)) of the raised (reigning) hand(s) (of the plural form –m it is not 100% clear whether it refers to the limit or the hand). In other words: when we know and celebrate the limitations of human power, we are acting wisely. Another derivation via an envisioned root chaikham is possible as well – see below.4
Another important word to mention here is the word Hebrew itself: עברת - ‘Ibhriet , sign - script (!!) of ‘ebher : seeing / having a view at - the house - of the other (on the other side, you can see it but you may not be able to reach it easily; a region beyond or across; the later meaning of the associated verb became: to cross or to pass, as Jacob/Israel passed over the river Jabbok – 5 Genesis 32: 22, and the people of Israel later crossed the river Jordan – Joshua 1). In this way, Israel came ‘from the other side’; they were the ones ‘from beyond’ - ‘ibhri -, and in that way their language was also seen. There is an additional layer here,6 because can also stand for someone who ‘sees to’ (cares for) the house of another person, that is: a servant. In the name of their language, the people of Israel were reminded that they had been servants in Egypt (as Jacob with Laban), and their God had delivered them! Note that in world history nobody has been so literally ‘Ibhriet – a servant on a cross, with th from ‘the other side’ to bear that cross as a servant, here in our place!

More on this in a separate article: Wisdom, here at www.Hallelu-YaH.nl , April/May 2011.
There are indications that here too, we have to read ‘the Other’ and that the house refers to the sun, which was quite generally viewed as the house of the gods; for example the word ברק baraq would then originally have been (the light of) the rising sun (the house of the Other that rises/shines). ‘Ebher would then refer to the point at the (eastward) horizon where you can look at the (rising) sun without being blinded.
Stil another layer is seen by comparing ‘ibhrit to berit; ‘ibhrit is then: having an eye for (paying attention to) the covenant.
Ilu in the old Sumerian, with -remarkably- as feminine form: Ilatu (remarkable, because -at is the well known Semitic feminine suffix).

my father be like God: to be lifted up high ⇒ to fly (high; esp. of birds of prey).

The meaning of אָבַל 56-57]]: to mourn, is probably derived from the name ’Abhel and his sad fate – see there

The pin attached to the doorpost or doorstep, on which the door hinges. It has strongly the connotation of stability and ‘keeping things together’, allowing the limited movement of the door, here applied to children (offspring)

“This root occurs as noun only twelve times. In Genesis 49:3, Deuteronomy 21:17, Job 40:16, Psalm 78:51 and Psalm 105:36 the word designates reproductive power as evidenced in the first born son. In Isaiah 40:26-29 the creative power of God is highlighted. Physical strength and/or wealth are denoted in Job 18:12, Job 20:10 and Hosea 12:9.” Source: R. Laird Harris, Gleason L. Archer Jr., Bruce K. Waltke, Theological Wordbook of the Old Testament (TWOT), Moody, ISBN 978-0802486493 (emphasis added).

The Arabic form اخو - ’achu is the corrsponding verb: to fraternize, to behave oneself as brother or friend; after the old symbols: to connect (as) with a brother / primary flesh (a bodily/fysical being). Possibly this is the basic form (the primary flesh one is connected to).

אֱנ֫וֹר: שִׁי֫

Some of the old form is still observed in the plural: שִׁים

Such is apparently the natural state of humanity: weak, dependent on God and others… Also the connotation ‘social’ is encountered, which seems to follow logically from the mutual dependance. It appears in de Bible 42 times in the Hebrew and 25 times in the Aramaic form (’enash), both predominantly in later poetic texts (e.g.
Psalm 103: 15; 9: 20 v.v.). See also in table 3 under the name ’Enosh [582].

I am also reminded of אנ' - ’ani - ‘I am’ (lit: the 1st in my family).

Sumerian: ama. According Giovanni Semerano the corresponding Akkadian form ummu (pronunciation: uum; mother, womb; probably also related to the Sumerian ummum) is the basis of the English word womb and the Gotic wamba. The added b therein as a kind of home or container, I find remarkable. The closely asociated womb notion seems to confirm the interpretation as the first or primary water.

Think also of what God says in Yesha-yahu (Isaiah) 49:15.

There seems to have been confusion here already early about the spelling (compare also: Sumerian izi, Turkish: isi). The probably older than the first variant depicted; the Hebrew. In Arabic there is no such word for fire (as far as I know); for the most important Arabian word نار - n’ur see [5135] and [215]. The word may be a loanword from Sumerian izi (also present in Turkish isi).

The Arabic form seems to denote that originally it may have been an offspring of ’ab - father.

Ernst E. Ettisch (in: Hebräisch – ein uraltes Hieroglyphensystem, Tel Aviv, 1951) explains the parallel בת - bat daughte sein Haus abschließen, es behüten, bewachen.”, p.16); this notion is familiar in the Bible – cf. e.g. Song of

Songs 8: 9. The plural בנות - banot makes clear that בת - bat really is a feminine variant of ben.

‘Seen’ as ‘being looked up to’. Compare what I said in the first part about the ayin (contrary to the ’aleph) as a letter of (being focused on) the outward appearance. The interpretation of the ‘ajin as ghajin is possible here as well: the leader who envelops or covers, i.e. protects, the house / family.

Fürst says of a form bōr that the wav in it is old; he doesn’t say this, however, of a most clearly related form with a patach with the meaning: in a moral sense, tried, approved, pure, clear; the Biblical form is without that wav. Gesenius says nothing about this and links bōr as purity and specifically as cleanness of hands … figuratively for innocency more or less to bōr as that which has a cleansing property: lixivium, alkali …. with reference to [H1287]. See also the discussion on this word-family, in the text after this table.

The descriptions given here are only additional mental associations. According the usual and most probable etymology berit comes from bārāh – to eat together.

According to Fürst the oldest form did not have the wav.

The name gammal for this animal appeared aleady in Akkadian and Sumerian, there often preceded by the determinative symbol ANSHE (not pronounced) for something like ‘things’, comparable to our ‘pack’ in ‘pack mule’, sometimes in combination with a word for (sand)sea; already in the 3rd millennium BC in the M.E. the camel was known as pack animal for desert travel, especially for the higher class (sometimes it is contended that it was domesticated only later, but this is what archeology demonstrates via language/script and pictures).

Gupnu in Akkadian (the same consonants; I do not exclude that the first u ( ) is also original: the vine as stick in the ground – cf. wayin - in that case the meaning is even clearer, as the vine is a foot that gives way to the grapes).

30

Tigre is a South-Semitic language. This is just one out of a multitude of examples from this language group that just fit the old (West-)Semitic script like most words from the other Semitic languages.

31

Fürst compares also דאדא - to give to drink, moisten, and the Sanskrit da-dhi - milk, dhê - to drink and dhajâ - a (breast-)sucking child. He also mentions the Aramaic synonym תד , but it is not certain whether this shouldn’t be related etymologically to thad / shad, so in origin דש - shad – see there.

32

Fürst explains that the original root of this was possibly דו - daw (to attach, weave, bind together); from the old symbols, this might be explained very well as: to enter with a pin, as in original sewing and weaving.

33

Possibly also via the connotation of blood and soul, finally ‘entering into (God’s) abundance’.

37

As mentioned earlier, the words that originally began with a wav have once been adapted and now begin with a yod or another letter. This is one of those. Note that the later form yāda‘ can be interpreted as: seeing the hand - seeing what you have to do, completely in line with Babylonian / Rabbinic shift in vision in the direction of ‘working’. In some derived words such as todah (8426תּוֹדה]] - confession, thanks to God) the wav still persisted. The root is probably related to the Sanskrit wid – what is seen as the basis of the Dutch weten (to know), German wissen, Gotic witan, Latin (di)videre, etc.

Concerning the bodily aspect, to see the pin (or ‘hand’ - cf. Cain) and door (opening) can be interpreted symbolically ( Compare the choice of words in the First Testament, e.g. in Ruth 4:13: „he (Boaz) went in to her…”
Compare also Arabic: wadād - love, friendship.
Both meanings are present in the first occurrance of this word in the Bible, in Genesis 3: 5, 7, where Adam and Eve (’Adam and Chawwah/Chuah) literally saw their pin and opening and ‘noticed’ (NBG) that they were naked. Remarkable in that context is that the word טוֹב - tobh - good, can litterally be seen as: ‘sheathing the bodily pin’ and רַע - ra‘ - evil as: ‘to see the other’. As pastoral worker I know that in pornography the issue is seeing (distance!) while in a good relationship the issue is to welcome and – as it were – envelop/protect each other (spiritually as well).
By the way, the table’s explanation also gives the relation with the synonym דַּעַת - da‘at [1847].
Compare: yachad - intercourse - ‘to enter the flesh with the branch’ (cf. the physical explanation for yāda‘).

In Arabic still وحد - wachada. For a better understanding of my explanation, see also Exodus 21: 2-6.

40

In Gesenius’ grammar, 1.2 § 19. these two words are etymologically related to each other. The Proto-Semitic original probably was WLD. The English to weld and wild may well be related in origin.

to ‘worship’ another with an arrow (or sling): to aim at a target and hit it; to throw, to shoot; / to let live the vines of the Other: to water, to rain (on), to flood;42 / hiph‘il: to make another reach his target/goal / to let him live: to teach, to point at, to show, to give direction, to instruct 43

pin as support of / in the construction of a door / pin to ‘enter into’ a cross: nail, big nail; (tent) pin; pin on which a door hinges cutting in the body’s flesh/meat: a butcher’s knife / to slaughter

the metal of the large knife(s) in the tent/house of worship (the Tabernacle/Temple): gold sign like that of a metal (i.e. bright shining) tent pin (originally: ת ו ז (or of a metal hand-decoration: (brightness/brilliance 44 and from that:) (illuminating) olive oil, olive tree, olive to value the blessing of the Other (God) / [that] the sword [victory, judgment] or scythe [harvest] [is] a blessing of the Other – God [we need]: to remember, to commemorate aloud (esp. what God has done);

(note: olive oil was used in lamps / for light)

also: having an instrument to bless another (and honor God): masculine 45

what comes forth from [having] much olive oil [for lamps] / to have harvested a lot of grain: (to take, set, appoint) time [for someone/-thing], season to worship what comes forth from (a precious) metal (thing; an idol): to commit idolatry, adultery (especially spiritually)

Old South Arabian and Ethiopian wrw, Ugaritic iri, Eblaite: warum. In Arabian I could not find a parallel form; I did encounter fawwārah (so, with an opening in front) - well, fountain, which lines up with the to rain down on. In Akkadian there was erâ or irâ - side-by-side (positioning).

42

Fürst (p.607) suspects that this form has been transposed from רִוָה- rawah, which is even more clearly explainable from the old symbols as: to let God’s vines live.

אָרָא – אָר/ to glow / to burn / to bring/give light (אוֹר).

Think also of the flaming/blinking sword of the angel guarding the entrance to paradise – Genesis 3: 24. It is not 100% clear here whether the zan/zajin was originally connected to the olive and olive-oil and upon the discovery of metals (bronze, in first instance) was used for that as well (and in particular for a scythe or sword) or that the etymological line possibly ran the other way.

Or: the tool for blessing another (& honoring the Other), or: (giving) a sword or a scythe in the (reigning) hand of an other; to fit him out (to remember = to empower in the OT; by commemorating Gods acts aloud you provide emotionally/spiritually a sword to overcome, or a scythe to harvest, in someone’s hand).
The second meaning refers also to this empowerment by God. It is masculine, to find your strength in God!
And besides that, having a masculine ‘tool’ is meant for blessing another (& honoring the Other) limit, statute, ordinance, prescription to worship God with flesh/meat: to burn, to set on fire (originally especially of a sacrifice/offering) , ⇒ also: to glow, grow warm, to blaze (of anger or jealousy)

what comes forth from charah:

anger, heat, burning, fire

(extra) piece of cloth or a sheet or plate connected to the breast, in front of it: breastplate, ~-piece (part of the clothing of the high priest;

this piece of cloth of the covenant brought symbolically the offspring of Israel forward to God)

The notion of grace can also be understood from the symbols as: a protective tent panel (protecting against the hotly burning sun as well as the cold at night) for your offspring. It gives them room to play and to grow up, without burning alive.

Alternative explanations involve [to be welcomed] to enter into the palm-tree border [of a wealthy men’s house] or into the [forbidden] zone around the Tree of Life; or: to bend the neck (nodding friendly towards a person of lower standing) as a doorpost (palm tree-like column between wall and door) was bent at the top, towards the one on the other side of the door.

52

Also the interpretation: ‘to worship the appearance of God’ (Who often apears in radiant fire!) is possible.

‘rich cream’). Rabbi Abraham H. Gottesman indeed relates it to breast feeding and to God’s promise of ‘milk

Gottesman, ‘Milk and Honey’, Jewish Bible Quarterly, Vol.22, No.3, July 1994; p.187-189; compare also the metaphor Moses used in Numbers 11:12; and compare Yesha-yahu / Isaiah 7: 15, where mother’s milk is God’s motherly care for His people!

In an extensive study of the word מְנוֹרָה, C. Houtman notes: “It is argued that as to its shape, the lampstand secondarily a light holder, symbol of YHWH’s approachability and powerful presence in the aniconic sanctuary. … The shaf

(Gen. 2:9; 3:24). More weight, however, might be attached to the fact that the tree was a specific place where theophanies happened (Gen. 12:6f.; 18:1; Judg. 6:11, 19, and see also 2 Sam. 5:24). That suggests the possibility that t

Nazarite

male jad: offspring, posterity what comes forth from the blessing fronds of the palm tree (cf. kēs):
dates, riches, goods, materials, treasures primary function of which is to spread light, should be in the form of a tree. After all, the life it symbolises owes its existence to light. The oil is its sap and the lights are its flowers and fruits.”

Source: C. Houtman, ‘מְנוֹרָה – lampstand’, in: כלי Database – Utensils in the Hebrew Bible, online resource, Het Oudtestamentisch Werkgezelschap (OTW; Old Testament Workgroup), 2010-2011.

65 Traditionally seen as derived from the verb ra’ah [7200] - to see. However, remarkable is the likeness to the Akkadian amāru – to see, find, meet, get to know, read, appear (be visible) (Akkadian Dict., Univ. Chicago, p. 527; cf. form than ra’ah. The first a-sound in both (the second, long ā in Akkadian) could point to an original ‘ajin, as denoted light grey in the old Semitic form.

66 That originally it was here נור also, we recognize e.g. in the word מנורה - menorah [4501] - many lamps for worship. Also already in Sumerian: nuru = light.

in one’s skin) of a branch/frond of a palm tree:
a thorn, spike, tooth, tusk, point/spike;
verb: to sharpen

67

Alternative interpretation: what comes after the eating by the other: (the leftovers and) the bird of prey coming to eat those leftovers.

68

Probably this word is adopted from Sumerian (hence the meaning does not follow so clearly from the symbols?). However, it is remarkable that it meant there to receive … See Matthias Ifejika, ‘The Biblical Exegesis: Does "natan" mean give or receive?’, at Academia.edu, 26 June 2014.

Very nicely illustrated in the old representation I find: God’s ultimate gift of new lfe via the cross and the resurrection of Jesus Christ, God’s Son. In that we are the recipients of that great grace…

In the Middle East there are more plants and trees with thorns, so an original with tsade is well possible as well, regarded the uncertainty about the first letter of the Proto-Semitic form as observed by the experts. Because of West-Chadic (language group in N-Africa, related to Semitic) sin (with samekh) - sharp point, tooth or sharp, I expect that the form based on the palm tree is the original one.

Note that from early on Sukkoth is the big festival of the light (and of water/abundance). The light atop the big seven-armed Menorah (itself a picture of a palm tree) in the temple symbolized the presence of God there. For more details on this: see the discourse on seneh/senah under the discussion of the sin/samekh, the articlesseries: 'The Hallelu-YaH site, January 2012. Compare also Jesus' statement: „I am The Light of the World!" (John 8: 12).

Derived from this is ספיר - sappir / saphire [5601] (lapis lazuli), the precious stone and the heavenly blue color of it. This gem and color were often associated with God and His throne (Exodus 24: 10; Ezekiel 1: 26; 10: 1; cf. Revelation 21: 19 – the appearance of the second foundation of the heavenly Jerusalem).

72

The same idea is apparently at the root of סר'ן – what comes forth/ remains from the fronds of the 'other palm tree' (i.e. not the date, but the one on coast lines) – a 'skin' or 'armour' around the tree, with lots of razorsha

73

By the way, I find it remarkable that the palm tree sign of God (think of my explanation of the seneh, with the discussion of the samekh) got hidden (covered up) 2500 years ago and remained like that all those ages...

Wikipedia says: “The origin of the name oud (and its etymological cousin, lute) for the musical instrument is uncertain, but the Arabic العود)al-‘ūd) refers literally to a thin piece of wood similar to the shape of a straw, and may refer to the wooden plectrum traditionally used for playing the oud, to the thin strips of wood used for the back, or to the wooden soundboard that distinguished it from similar instruments with skin-faced bodies. … A plectrum called a risha is used to play the oud.”

Arabic: ghallafa, Akkadian: ghalāpu, Ugaritic: GhLP. So, the ‘ayin really clearly is ghayin here! This word strongly confirmes the meaning of the ghayin.

possible interpretation from the old Semitic pictures, and meaning to open and let light enter / to blow a [lighting]

fire higher: to light(en); to visit, to pay attention to, to discover

⇒ what has been laid open / enlightened, what is to be paid attention to: precept, statue, instruction, directive, direction(s)

open spot where the Other (God) gave entrance to the Tree of Life: paradise 84

the mouth of the other rejoices / to rejoice in the speaking of the Other (God) / to rejoice in the opening that the Other (God) gives:

to bear fruit, to be fruitful an opening in an other’s skin/boundary:

to bud, sprout, shoot, bloom /

to open, part, separate, cleave

/ an opening in the Other’s (God’s) fence/boundary (cf. Pesach): joy, gladness the opening of the Other (God) to the Tree of Life (got separated/inaccessible): to divide, break in two what comes forward from an opening of the other: excrements, dung, gore, offal ⇒ to separate, scatter, divide;87 to declare, distinguish, make distinct, specify; to wound, to cut, to pierce, sting, bite (as of a snake, with venom); a draught-horse opening, constructed in a wall: doorway, opening, entrance; to open;

also: to engrave

83

Can also be interpreted as: an opening that rises/ goes up, or: in which the sun goes up, becoming a door: offering access to what is inside. From there as well the original meaning is: to lay open, to bring light into, to look well at. The notion of ‘to lighten’ (shortened to פד - p-d) we see again in what literally might be called a ‘light stick’: a torch: דַ לַפ - lappid.
The equivalent Akkadian paqādu stands for meanings like: ‘to care for’, ‘to entrust something to someone’, ‘to exert oneself’ (source: The Assyrian Dictionary of the Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago, Oriental Institu means: to see something, to research, inspect or to miss / have lost. All this supports the interpretation ‘to pay attention to’, and definitely not the later Rabbinic-Judaist (traumatized/distrusting) interpretation ‘to punish’, which some translations employ.

84

The Jewish Encyclopedia gives in its explanation of ‘Paradise’ some valuable background info with regard to paradise and the role of the Tree of Life (looking like the date palm) in it. See there also under ‘Tree of Life’.

85

Probably related (loanword? common origin?) to Sumerian: parasu – to cut, to tear apart. In Akkadian: parāsu to stop, t one halft, and parātsu (with tsade) – to break an oath / to lie, to breach; source: The Assyrian Dictionary of the Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago, Oriental Institute, Chicago IL, USA, 1956-2006; ISBN 0 918986 05 2; Part 12 (2005), p.165-195).

The Akkadian had already parshu - excrement(s), gore (concerning the latter, cf. parishtu - a post-menopause woman; and parāsu in the sense of stopping the bleeding; source: The Assyrian Dictionary of the Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago, Oriental Institute, Chicago IL, USA, 1956-2006; ISBN 0 918986 05 2; Part 12 (2005), p.187, 205-206). The word appears there, as in the Bible, especially in the context of slaughtering animals for sacrifice.
פְ - perushim, was derived from the verb pārāsh.
The name of the Pharisees רוּשִׁיּם

Concerning the meaning ‘to divide’ confusion with pāras may have played a role.

what they used to do with reed for a house:
to collect, gather or bring together (a great a multitude/assembly of things or people to enter the grain or wheat: to push it aside;

to catch (encircle) in a trap, snare or net to grow straight upward (upright; directed at the sun and shining like gold/fire in the sun) like a reed or wheat plant (cf. Mat.13:43):
upright, righteous 89

such extruded oil onto another: do glisten /

(for a house) in sheaves (to ripen/dry); to arrange, to set up, to establish, to order, to delegate, to give power over, to appoint, to command, to charge, to constitute enjoin to come forward (extrude) on all sides from a stick in the ground (plant) or from some of its branches: to blossom, shine / flower 91

Also צִבֵּב. Cf. Proto-Semitic tsub - tribe. Fürst (p. 1179) gives also צוּבָא - tsoba’ - “plantation, establishment, settlement”. See also his reference to the root צָב in his note on צְוָאה- tsāvāh [6680] (below). On p. 1174 (see also p. 1172) he gives צבת - tsābat – “to bind together”, and as tsebet: “a sheaf, a bundle”; which all confirm my theory.

89

Also: to press the door-pin (hinge, lock) up, so that the door works properly or so that God can enter. The righteousness of Abraham is illustrated in this word as well, as he moved the tent pins, by hand, upward, extruding them (from home ground) – to go and leave (extrude from home) in answer to God’s call. And as the Papyrus with the stick (the Scripture scrolls) went round, to act upliftingly.

90

This deals with organizing / arranging the grain harvest or the harvest of reed for building houses, with many people. Fürst (p. 1180; see also p. 1172) notes on צָוַה‎ – tsāvāh [6680]: “prop. to establish, to erect, to set up, proceeding from the fundamental signification to join firmly together, to put closely together (into one), to close or wind together, closely connected in its organic root צָוַ֫ה with צַב (צבב). … Hence 1. … to erect, set up … 2. … to settle, to appoint, to constitute, to give definite directions, to arrange; …” (emphasis and underlining mine). In his further explanation of the meaning in various specific cases, what stands out is the central theme of arranging, partly by delegating power, to set up something great by unified effort.

Did you ever think of a tsiytsit (6734) as a sign of flourishing (before God)? That is what it most literally is! See also the article on the Tsitsit at this Hallelu-YaH site, april 2012.

Whether in Akkadian this is even related to qadû – to pay attention to (bow oneself over it?, let light enter into it?), is not completely clear.

Compare also: Arabic: quds, qadusa, Akkadian: qudushu, qadāshu; there a qudāshu was a kind of wedding ring (a ring, worn by women as sign of being married); also: quddushu - holy, pure; and qushshudu - to cleanse, purify.

In the root קדוש there is both the aspect of cleansing and of setting apart for the service to God. Though the word itself does not appear there, I see the notion clearly illustrated in Numbers 8: 5-22.

The interpretation of the old symbols is not completely clear (yet). The interpretation ‘radiant/shining’, based on: light (as of the rising sun) that, moving and becoming stronger, comes forward / radiates from the inside out, is partly based on how God Himself in His holyness radiates with the glorious light in which He is enrobed. Christ sanctifies (and cleanses) His Bride such that she will be glorious/dignified/worthy (and without spot or wrinkle, respectively) – Ephesians 5: 25-27; Revelations 19: 6-8. Alternative interpretations are e.g.: fire connected to the Source (?), spiritually: to let the rising sun / Morningstar enter into your heart (?).

From the physical interpretation: to enter (going up and down) into a couple of breasts (a woman), we see the meaning: ‘(male temple-) prostitute’ [6945]. The female Canaanite idol called by this name, was often depicted, pushing her breasts upward (very literal physical interpretation: upward movement of the breasts). Note that even this involved a certain pride (supposed dignity).

Qannu in Sumerian. Compare the consonants in the Latin: cornu (kárnon in Keltic; Proto-Indo-European: k'rū, k'era(w)); to which our ‘horn’ is related. The original root seems to be qr – raising from (or: upper side of) the head.
This view is in full agreement with that of Frederic Delitzsch, in: The Hebrew Language – Viewed in the Light of Assyrian Research (Williams & Norgate, London & Edinburgh, 1883; p.6-7). He compares this word to “the Assyrian rîmu – that strong-homed, fierce-looking wild bull, skilled in climbing the mountains whose colossal and formidable likeness was placed by the Assyrian kings before the entrance of their palaces to ward off and terrify the approaching enemy.” He strongly opposes the interpretation as Antelope leucoryx, an animal denoted לבן ראם in modern Ibhrit. From the dual plural horns (קַרְנַיִ) in Psalm 22: 21; 92: 10 it appears not to be a Unicorn. Cf. Job 39: 9-10 and Deut 33: 17. Think also of our word ram – both the horned animal and something to ram a city gate in the process of trying to conquer it.

In Sumerian reshu was a top or summit (e.g. of a mountain).

101

Originally there was an additional wav in the word with this meaning: check on eating safely, therefore this notion also appears in the form רוש.

102

This word was known already in Akkadian as well; there it underwent a development, in particular in the vowelization: rachmu ⇒ rechmu ⇒ re'mu. Compare Arabic: rachima - to have mercy (for s.o.), compassion, rachma - pity, compassion. And Ugaritic: r-ch-m - to be kind.

Biblically the pomegranate is a symbol of fertility, blessing and abundance – in full accordance with its original name. They say that one fruit may contain up to 800 seeds. The pomegranate is also attributed an aphrodisiac effect; it would increase testosterone levels in men and women. Others say the seeds have an estrogenic effect, useful for women in menopause. Ironically, Hippocrates and others prescribed it to prevent conception.

When the ripe fruit falls on the ground, the seeds spread everywhere around. From there the association in the hand grenade, which in Ivrit is also a רימון יד - rimon jad.

The post-Babylonian Judaism connects the pomegranate to the 613 mitswot they distilled from the Torah, and therefore with righteousness and holiness. Biblically this is incorrect, in my opinion. According the Torah righteousness and holiness are a grace gift of God and not the merit of human endeavor to keep 613 laws…

The Greek form ΡΑΓΟΥΗΛ of the derived name Reghu'el [7467] gives an indication that the original form was written with a ghayin.

105

or ʼ

The old notation is remarkable, for in Egypt the hieroglyph by which this idol/god was denoted was sometimes also a more detailled picture of a right eye.

106

Possibly, among Israelites and later among Jews, this word contributed to the fear to see God.

It is tragic that in the Roman imperium the sun-worship – so a big form of 'evil'– was adopted syncretistically into the Roman church (see e.g. the aureoles around heads of 'saints', etc.).

The interpretation from the form with ghayin shows how evil it was to hide the glorious Name of God, as Rabbinic Judaism did.

our word seven would even be derived from a common source, compare also Gotic sibun, Latin septem and Sanskrit saptan - सप्तन्

Compare also the Arabic: ثبت - thabata - to stand stable/sturdy, solid. The Arabic ث - tha/ta corresponds, like the Arabic س - sin, often with the ש - shin in Hebrew. I interpret it here from the idea of bulging/protruding, com the symbol for a tent or house one sees an erected tent. When, at the end of a day, as a nomad in the Ancient Middle East, one had erected one’s tent again, one was ready and could relax / sit down.

cloth of the erected tent, no longer flappering or so but coming to quiet and leaving no worries anymore.
And שׁבק – to let an erected tent rise / go up again – to let go, to leave.
The most original explanation or etymology is hard to establish here. Shabbath can also be read as: to finish ( ) one’s work as soure of income/feedding ( ) for one’s family ( ) (this explanation fits with Arabic sabab – source of existence), to make full / finish ( ) the fullness ( ) at home ( ), to cherish ( ) one’s home/family ( ) to fullness ( ) (or the sign of [the connection/ covenant of] one’s house with The Sorce / the sign to eat at home). An alternative explanation, starts from a form with possibly an additional ’aleph in it: the sign ( ) of the Source ( ) of the first man (
- father [of all]), the sign of God’s covenant with Adam.
See also shāba‘.
Another explanation sees in the shin the number six such that shabbat or shebet is the finishing off after six work days, related to shebha‘ - seven (7); our word would even originate from a common source). In Sumerian sebet was already the word for the number seven and in Sanskrit it was: saptan - सप्तन्

Fürst says of this: “of fullness that pours itself out”. This is completely in line with the interpretation of the symbol

, given here. In Sumerian shadu or sadu was a mountain – in fact a ‘bulging’ of the earth, from which rivers brought fullness of life to a wide area.

The original first letter is uncertain here; a similar root appears also with the letter tsade: צוד - tsud [6679] – to hunt (to suppress by penetrating with a pin/arrow/spear). It is likely that this was the original form.

Probably, the wav was not only used for tent pins but also for bones and horns (from the same ram as from which the horn was used as shophar); so that line of thought may well provide another possible explanation. The name of Chuah/Chawwah (Eve [2332]) seems to indicate that this is indeed so.

112

An explanation from the palm tree as support pillar is possible as well; the original form:

or is not 100%

The Greek ταῦρος - tauros, Latin: taurus and PIE tauro - (powerful) bull, ox are clearly related / derived from this! This word (all variants) stood also for the constellation taurus.

The Arabic form stands also for a master or chief. The plural of it is: tirān – the etymologic parent of our word tyrant! This gives an image of how one looked at the big oxen / aurochs in those days.

The Arabic form has a ta (also in Mehri). The Aramaic differs from Hebrew. So, it is not clear whether origias breasts c nally here we have to think of the

- shell, or the as horns. The explanation for the generic notion of the is possible as well: the coming forward – that is: the appearance of God. The bull (think of the big auroch with 2 m. shoulder height) was regarded as the mightiest animal and therefore served as image (hull of clay; the is very suitable!) of the gods/idols (see also at ’El).

Personally I find all these examples together (and there are many more!) too significant to say: it is just a coincidence, that the sum total of the elementary meanings of the constituting symbols is so much in agreement with the meaning of each word, even though some linguists contend that it is coincidence, because they cannot explain the relationship (yet). I see it as a characteristic example of how God made His written Word even accessible for the less literate people in those early days. As a scientist I can have questions (e.g. how did that wonderful coherence emerge precisely?). As a human being (creature) I’d rather stand in awe and worship God, knowing that we – with all our ‘science’ – ‘know’ only such a terrible small little bit of it all… In my opinion, the scientific questions do not need to stand in the way of the wonder we can experience as believers, on the contrary! The more science I study the more enthusiastic I become for the greatness and magnificence of the Creator! Hallelu-YaH!

It is also a sign of abundance (that does not run out)! Here one probably has to think of the sexual bond that is to last forever.

124

When one walked in the desert and thought to see water, it often was a fata morgana. When one saw a palm tree, it was certain: there is an oasis. Thus: a sign of water from God or from someone else. Remarkable in the word tamar is that the tav and mem are the suffix letters for the feminine and masculine plural. The date palm is dioecious: there are male and female trees. The word tamar thus represents the feminine and masculine plurality (fertility) that is in God. See also the article: ‘The Palm Tree in the Bible (7) – More on the word Tamar & a new Palm Tree’,

The enrichment of Biblical Hebrew from the old Semitic symbols

The letters and their meanings also intrigue me, in particular that hei. From linguistics I know that the hei has been added both as prefix and as suffix to root words, and yet as believer I find it wonderful how the hei plays a large role in words like ‘to be’/‘to live’ (to rejoice and worship together in awe and secure attachment), and ‘path of life’

- halakhah (to rejoice and worship together in the blessing hand of the great Leader; or to worship with joy the Leader Who stretches His blessing and protecting hand over your joyful worship).

Often the old Hebrew, I mean: old Semitic image of a word, brings me to mental associations that otherwise I would probably not have seen so easily. Take a word like shem

– name. When you look at it, you see the source of water, the source of abundance, or food and water. Having a name, is related to having a well, which in that area is almost synonymous to enough food and water. When you even have enough for your offspring, or to renew your life , then apparently you are rich, in Dutch young people currently say ‘fat’ (and at that time too: shamen = fat, rich; look at a Dutch cow and the average one in Africa, to see what rich and fat have to do with each other).

Now the Jewish confession, the Shema‘

, is often translated: ‘Hear (Israel…)’, but one may as well read: see the Name! Or: to see the Source of abundance! (Or: to see a full source of water; see how blessed you are by God!) Indeed the glorious, promise-full Name of God appears already twice in the very first line! His glorious Name, that is: His presence is the promise, the source by which we can live from the Shema‘ – from seeing The Name, seeing the Source to draw living water from, and from hearing what He tells! The associated promise to Israel was that they would also have/see sufficient food and drink... 125 Surely a reason to listen well…

Speaking about seeing a source of water given by God, I am reminded of shalom source of the great Shepherd, to be secured of water, or: with secure attachment and all that in abundance (or: and enough to drink). Isn’t that perfect? What more would an early Semite (or any human in any age) want?

To enjoy fullness (

) under a palm treee or palm-leaf covering ( ) with a ruler or a king ( reigning hand), you do in a luxurious pavilion, or, if it is with The King or His priest (blessing hand) in the tabernacle: indeed in both cases in a sok - שׂך)or סך( )assimilation of samek and shin into sin

here!). When we as His children (offspring -) can share in the fullness (have communion) of the great King like that, He tabernacles (shakan ) with/under/in us, and we experience in joyful worship something of His Shekinah (

); the fullness (

) of His glorious and wonderful blessing ( ) that He shares ( ) with His worshipping children (

With regard to eating, it is important not to let our intake ruin our relationship with God, as happened with Eve and Adam in Genesis 3. What came forth from eating beyond God-given limits ( nachash) is what in Arabic is called nachasa ‘to make s.o. unhappy’ or ‘to bring bad luck’. Hebrew maintains the term for ‘snake’ (Arabic: حنش – chanash), what looks like: ‘eating the skin of your children’; snakes oft with copper. Snake idols were among the first objects that were made out of copper/bronze.

Sometimes something nice can be found in one of those little words. A combination of two of those we encounter regularly, often translated as ‘therefore’, is: עַל־כֵּן – al-kēn. In the old script:
seeing the Leader Who blesses / excercises authority over the kids / the offspring. Yes, that is a reason to do somethir shall cleave unto his wife: and they shall be one flesh.”) Actually, the view on the Leader (God) (
- עַל) is already a sufficient encouragement and thereby translatable as ‘therefore’. And His blessing over His children (
- כֵּן - often used as affirmation), His “Yes and amen” (cf. 2 Corinthians 1: 18-20) amplifies that.
By the blessing of God everything is completed; it becomes ripe, fully grown, mature, whole. We see this in the two letter old Semitic root
- כל or 3605-כּוֹל]] - kol (Arabic: كل - kull) - in itself often translated as ‘all’, ‘the whole’, ‘every…’. Based on th 4359-מְ]] - miklal / miklul (physical) maturity, to be on full strength, 3632-כְּלִיל]] - kālil - whole, en כְּלָל

!The Written Language of Abraham, Moses and David

In this way I observe that the letters and words often support and affirm the Biblical message. Take the observation that God knows us already from before our tiniest beginning in the womb (Psalm 131, 139). I see that resonated in the fact that the unborn child is the starting point in the word for womb:
- literally: the other’s skin (as protective wall), with water / in abundance [all rechem [7358/-6] around you]. Note that derived from this is the pronunciation variant: racham [7355/-6] - compassion, t love, cherish and protect, as in a womb, or with the warm and gentle feelings that you feel there; alternatively to be interpreted as the other’s wet skin (of crying), asking for compassion. In that case it is related to נחם - nacham [5162] - in origin: [touching/caressing] the wet (from weeping) skin of your kids (in abundance): to comfort in sorrow.
Two important Biblical notions are יִרְאַת יְהוָה – yireat YaHUaH (a.o. Psalm 19: 9; Proverbs 1: 29; 2: 5; 8: 13; 9: 10; 2 Chronicles 19: 9) and פַּחַד יְהוָה pachad YaHUaH (a.o. 1 Samuel 11: 7), both of which are commonly translated by ‘the fear of the LORD’, which I always found a notion, difficult to combine with the character of God. We can pose the question: What do the original signs say here, in relation to the glorious Name
? In the first case that is
- ‘He, the Other, gives from beginning till the end’, or: ‘the hand of the Other, first and last’.126 YaHUaH is there wi ruling hand from the beginning till the end – He does not forsake you! (Think of my discussion of the notion wachad/’echad.) As far as there is fear or anxiety involved from our side, it is like the fear of children who know they cannot do without their precious father and mother, and therefore cling to the hand of the father or mother, e.g. in a busy shopping mall. When we realize Who YaHUaH is, and how He deals with us in love, He becomes so precious to us that we don’t want to lose sight of Him – not for any price! So, a better translation would be: ‘our attachment to YaHUaH’. Therefore Proverbs 16:6b also says: “by the yirath YaHUaH men depart from evil”, for if you are intimately attached to Him Who gives you Life, then you don’t want sin to be in the way of that relationship. As Jesus said: “Where your treasure is, there will your heart be.” There is also a relation with ra’ah - (fore)see (/provide). From His great riches God provides (yireh) for those who belong to Him (Genesis 22: 14). He also sees it when we reject Him consistently and then there is reason to fear… The root of yirath is translated in 2 Samuel 7: 23 and in Nechem-yah (Nehemiah) 1: 5 in some translations by ‘aweinspiring’ (ISV) or ‘awesc appears that the yod at the beginning originally probably was a wav (Fürst’s dictionary confirms this), such that the basic meaning on the basis of the symbols becomes: the attachment to God first (and last). Then also the association with the word light ’or comes forward (further on more about that). God is light, or a devouring/purifying fire (cf. Exodus 20: 18 and what follows). Concluding, in yirath YaHUaH there are the connotations: ‘always start from our attachment to YaHUaH’, ‘attached to / aware of the greatness of YaHUaH’ (reason for peace of mind when you belong to Him, or for fear if not) or ‘awareness that YaHUaH is pure/purifying light and fire’. So much for the first notion.

Now the second. Pachad is

- the wind that moves a ‘wall’ of your tent or blows it open.127 In the open plains of and about Israel storms can rage quite ferociously. That is a natural violence that can stir up anxiety in a simple Bedouin. Fortunately there is the Ruach ha Qodesh - the Holy Spirit/ Wind. Ruach - the Other Who connects to your flesh or Who (as wind) is on your tent pins and walls, or (being God) Who offers security and connection to your tent walls or flesh. Let us have a look at the context in which these words appear in 1 Samuel 11: 7. “And the pachad YaHUaH fell on the people, and they came out as one man. (an ’ish ’echad).” (I encourage you to read the whole passage in its context – it is an impressive story!) What or who unites people like that, to become ’echad like God is? Anxiety? Dread (as some translate)? Mostly not; anxiety and fear regularly let us withdraw from others. However, the Holy Spirit is known for this, to unite people into one. In my humble opinion we should regard Pachad here also in this way: as a synonym for Ruach, emphasizing that the Spirit of God is not to be toyed with. When God comes with His presence, His Spirit, great things are going to happen (compare Exodus 19)! Then you will do better to join Him, obey and honor Him, than to go against Him! I would translate Pachad here with: ‘the impressive Spirit of God’.

In case the tav on the end is, as usual, interpreted as grammatical suffix only (status constructus), this becomes: ‘He, For a more extensive, classical study on yirath YaHUaH: John J. Parsons, ‘The Fear of the LORD – Further thoughts on Parashat Eikev’, at the website Hebrew for Christians. On other grounds he too links yirath YaHUaH to the Spirit of God and to fulfillment with a deep reverence for Who God is in His great might and love.

127

An alternative interpretation of pachad reads: to enter an opening in the boundary [the one around the Tree of Life; cf. pasach and chesed] – something quite fearful; there was a strong angel with a flaming sword. Another one reads: the wind (Ruach) that enters the flesh; referring to the indwelling of the Ruach – literally: God connected to one’s flesh.

!– A study of the pictographic roots and basic notions underlying the earliest Biblical script

The meanings of the letters as distinct from the phonetic function of the letters in the alphabet and in grammar (e.g.: the hei as suffix creating a feminine noun out of a verb), sometimes can be seen as responsible for the t in relation to the root

: with the hei as -later- grammatical suffix it remains ‘sin’, but with the hei as pictogram for ‘worship’ it becomes ‘sin offering’. This phenomenon I encounter more often. Apparently, some knowledge of the old Semitic script and the original meanings of the symbols, offers also clarity and understanding concerning some ‘strange differences in meaning’.

The designation for God/god: ’Elohim I already discussed. A derived form of this, appearing 84 times אֱלֹהֵיכֶם- ’Eloheykhem; old Semitically written:
(7x12: fullness!) in the Torah, is יכם'
. With YaHUaH’s giving of abundance this emphasizes that He does so with authority ( ) or that He is the One Who gives us authority/power in abundance ( ) to be able to do what He tells us to. The grammatical interpretation of the kaph as suffix (God Who says as it were: “I stretch my blessing hand towards you [plural]!”) already encompasses this element of God’s empowerment, but in the old Semitic representation it is presented even stronger, I think. In the specific context of each of those 84 texts, this is most revealing! The Torah was not a law to fulfill in one’s own strength, but an instruction to live from the intimate attachment to God and from His power!
Remarkable I find the light (
- אור - ’or [215-8]) that God created at the very beginning, in Genesis 1: 3. According the old Semitic symbols this light can be translated as ‘the first secure connection to the Other, i.e. to God, or to (one) another’.128 God is pictured as ‘dressed in this light’ (Psalm 104: 1-2; 1 Timothy 6: 16129). God provides security and connection / belonging. And that security and connection (psychologists speak of ‘secure attachment’) is a kind of ‘light’ – it radiates (compare the word glory). It is the basis or foundation that God lays for all the further creation. God eliminates or demolishes the disconnection, the non-life, the in-security and the fear of darkness. He provides light. What is referred to, here and elsewhere, as light is ‘secure attachment’ to God. In his Gospel (John 1; 3; 9; 12) as well as in his first letter, John frequently speaks of this light, that Jesus is the Light (indeed: the/our first connection to God!) and of how we can and should walk in this light and spread it around us.130 There it is affirmed that the light is indeed the connection with God, and being or walking in t can be created only by shutting God, as the Source of this light, out of our life. Note the number of times words like ‘communion’, ‘fellowship’, ‘in’, ‘unity’, ‘covenant’ – all revolving around the notion of connection behind the wav – appear in almost all of the Bible passages involved (Isaiah 42: 6 even equates ‘light’ and ‘covenant’ – implicitly: with God – in a typical Hebrew parallel).
Paul refers (in 2 Corinthians 4: 6-7) to this verse (Genesis 1: 3) when denoting that God has ignited this light in our hearts. Thereby we can observe the radiant glory of God YaHUaH in the face of Christ, just like the people of Israel could see some of the glory of God radiate from Moses’ face, when Moses had been with God on the mountain or anytime later when he had been in the sanctuary of the tabernacle (cf. 2 Corinthians 3: 6-7; see also the short study ‘Let the light shine’ at Immanuel’s place).
In the discussion of the samekh/sin, I discussed the word seneh, explaining it to be the crown of a palm tree, and how God spoke to Moses from a fiery light from the top of it. I also discussed the Greek variant of the palm tree: phoenix. The etymology of phoenix could be explained very well by observing the back-transliteration into the original old Semitic signs. Remember that the great Temple Menorah was in fact an image of that palm tree with God’s light on top of it. My eye fell on the word lux, Latin for ‘light’, and I transliterated it (in the same way as I did with phoenix):
. It’s
that same palm tree again, securely connected to the Leader (or vice versa)… Coincidence…??
Though it may seem somewhat strange at first, all the above fits perfectly well with God YaHUaH being wachad (’echad) – a trustworthy and stable God Who unites like the stable pin at the doorpost

The same old Semitic symbols (and Hebrew letters, apart from the Masoretic signs) also form the name of the historic city of Ur, so by her founder or indirectly his parents (according the apocryphal book Jubilees Ur was founded by Ur, the son of Kesed – hence: Ur Kesdim in Genesis 11) called after that light, after this being attached to God. Around the end of the third millennium BC Ur was one of the greatest world cities – roughly till short after Abraham's departure to Canaan. Remarkable, that when a man of God leaves some place, that place, country or kingdom goes down in welfare and/or power.

The pronunciation of Ur reminds me of the Dutch 'oer' (original, of long ago), or rather: the other way round. Probably no coincidence, either…

connects the moving door to the wall.
The same concept of YaHUaH as One Who brings multitudes together and Who unites people we see in the word Tsebha'oth that is applied several times to Him – see my note on this significant word, further on, just below Table 3. 131
There can be no nature without spirit,
"no
world without Torah,

no brotherhood without a Father, no humanity without attachment to God.
Abraham Joshua Heschel 132

That attachment to God we cannot reach on our own. That shows us the old Arabic word الو, which probably goes back to the old Semitic 'alu ; the meaning of this is: not being able to, be unfit.
The last two lines of Heschel remind me of the 'Our Father' prayer. 'Our Father' is in Hebrew just one word: אבינו - Abhinu (note that this word contains all three original old (even Proto-)Semitic vowels and does not really need any Masoretic vowel signs!); written in old Semitic:
- literally: Father
(First of the house/ family-at-large), He gives His children (offspring) secure bonding. And all that, in just five simple signs… Clearer and more concise than I could ever formulate it in English or Dutch.
What strikes me is that this older Hebrew is a very physical language, rooted strongly in important objects from a practical nomadic existence, full of reverence for God.
Often we really have to imagine the physical shepherding life to recognize a word. Take the Hebrew (and Arabic) word מלח - melach [4414/-6] – salt (also: to dissipate, evaporate). Anyone who ever walked a day with a shepherd or cattle farmer will know that almost all kinds of animals will like to lick your hand, certainly at the end of a warm day. Why? Because they like the salty sweat on your skin. And immediately you see the relation of salt here with the shepherd's skin ( ), with the mem either as water (sweat that hasn't fully dried up yet) or as prefix meaning 'from'; salt being the stuff the cattle lick from the shepherd's skin when the water had evaporated!
The word מלח - mallach [4419] - sailor is usually seen as related to the salt of the sea. But seen from the old Semitic it simply is a leader (skilled man) who has water on his skin – simple, isn't it…?

Another case in which some knowledge of old Semitic origins provides clarity, is where in the course of time one or more letters were lost. In the discussion of the letter , I already reflected on the word shad , meaning both breast, nipple, and violence or power. Those two seem to be quite distant from each other… However, by observing the old root - shud - to hunt (easy to remember from the verb to shoot) next to thad/dad, dod and dud, it all became rather comprehensible. Omnipotence and from that: protection, as well as a source and nourishing and cherishing are descriptive of God YaHUaH in relation to us, such that He is denoted as El Shaddai – literally: God my Shad. Both encompass an element of God being and providing more than sufficient.

You may be aware that Jewish religious leaders liked to be called or at least often were called Rab, Rabbi (= my Rab) or Rebbe (the Jiddish form). This is an interesting word, though it's use is not completely positive. C - literally the Other (God/god) of the house, or the other/ Other's house/tent, a.o. for a temple or the sun (the house of the gods in the vision of many I that region). In Aramaic (not Hebrew!) it came to represent [possibly via temple] for great [7229] and either from there, or from the meaning 'the Other of the house' for a foreman, chief, director etc. (and for a multitude – pronounced as: rob ()). From there developed the Jewish word Rabbi - literally: my chief/ boss.

I do not rule out a possibly strong connotation with - r'abh, that may have been there, which can be interpreted as other father or godfather. This reminds me of Jesus' remark: not call anyone father, for One is your Father... to which both Jewish religion and the R-C church have been a countermovement in the wa As here…

That house of the other we encounter as well in another word that is worth mentioning:

- 'arab (from which also our word Arab). This is an interesting word because it has so many, seemingly totally different meanings, which, however, can all be traced back to that old Semitic ground form: seeing the other's house (various of those meanings also say something about how Israel saw the original Arab nomads [6152])134:

When you saw the sun – that house of the gods – (i.e. when you could look at it without being blinded), the sun was close to the horizon (rising or going down) and so you were looking towards the east or especially: the west [6153 vgl. 6150] (among the Semites the Arabs were the ones living most south-west). When you were watching the house of the [human] other, you apparently went to visit him/her (the Arab nomads were very hospitable), which was pleasant, sweet [6149, 6156] (they made you feel pleasant). Or it became evening [6150, 6153] and you had to spend the night there. Or you went to obtain or give a security or mortgage [6148]. Or you mixed (up) [6151, 6154] or intermixed with others (according the Biblical narrative, the forefathers of the Arabs, such as Ishmael and Esau did not remain faithful to YaHUaH). Or through the covering of cloth (tent) or clay (house) the structure of sticks of the other's house became visible (seeing the other's house, very physical): poplar or willow wood [6155] (grows fast, is not strong/thorough). It could also be a swarm [6157] of mosquitoes or other vermin who came to 'see' or visit the houses (or bodies) of people. [There might have been even additional confusion with

'arab – that one pried at someone else's earthly tent, in ambush, but that is with aleph, not ayin.]

Many words also contain a wealth in information about those times and the way people lived back then. For example: for what purposes certain basic materials were used. From 3869לוּז]] - luz – almond wood, literally: '[the material of] the connection between a leader and his sword / a farmer and his scythe' we see that this wood was used to make handles. From 2091זהב]] - záhábh - gold, '(the material of) the big knives in the tent/house of worship (the Tabernacle/Temple)' that people found that most characteristic for gold, that it was used especially for the knives in the temple. So, apparently, that was the most well known/characteristic usage of gold! Etcetera.

With silver - 3701כסף]] - kéceph - I had to think for a moment. But when you think of the ritual importance – e.g. on E
) for persons of authority
( ), which was done often with a palm ( ) leaf, e.g. a leaf/frond of a date tree, or of a palm tree like the Copernicia baileyana. And when you see that, it is clear immediately. And so is the equivalent 3700כסף]] - kácaph - to pant, to long for (as for water) to blanch, to grow pale (a loose palm leaf grows pale quickly; first turning even more silver-gray, later beige-brownish).

Ever wondered about the etymology of ebony, that precious kind of wood? In old Semitic it was - Hebrew 1894הבו]] - hoben. Apparently, it was used as a way to honor the house of one's kids. Ezekiel 25: 17 affirms that it was used as a gift to honor others, indeed…

Very interesting I also find the family of words that can be traced back to the roots בור or בר - bōr. In the old script:
, that is: house of or connected with God (or some other high one). Many of these words are related to purity, to purify, etc. – e.g. בר - bōr [H1252-3] – pure, purity, purifying lye, and ברר - bārar [H1305] - to purify, to let shine. The house of God was and is pure and shining / radiant par excellence! One of the chemicals likely already used around 2000 BC (and still being used) as well as one of the prominent borates is borax,135 that is found in nature. It was often used and is still used to purify silver and gold and when hot-soldering/welding these metals, to let it flow more easily and prevent oxidation (cf. Isa. 1: 25; Job 9: 30). With this borax the precious metal became or remained pure and shining (certain silver-polishes still contain borax; a very thin layer of it makes the silver shine and oxidate/blacken less quickly after polishing). This same borax is still used in detergents and bleaching compounds as well. A millennia-old means to purify one's hands was what we Dutch as derived from a root starting with ghayin instead of 'ayin. This could be right as well, since the ghayin represents the notion of covering or hiding from sight, as the sun is hidden from sight upon its setting.

For the etymology of borax dictionaries refer to the Perzian and/or Arabic borak, but the root is much older and can just be found in the Bible...
Even a rather critical website says about borax: “According to legend, Babylonians brought borax from the Far East more than 4,000 years ago to be used by goldsmiths, and writings have frequently cited ancient Egyptians as using it in metallurgy, medicine, and mummification, but none of this can be substantiated. The nitron baurak of the Greeks, the borith of the Hebrews, the baurack of the Arabians, the boreck of the Persians, and the burack of the Turks might all appear to express the same substance, borate of soda (i.e. borax). However, there is little evidence to show when or whether these names described the substance we now know as borax (Na2B4O7.10H2O). In fact, they are all transliterations of the Arabic word meaning to glitter or shine.”

call boorwater; water in which an acid or salt of boron is dissolved (this is an effective old desinfectant and preservative; it is anti-bacterial, anti-fungal and works also against moulds, virusses and insects; cf. boron acid ointment to extract dirt from surface wounds; cf. 2 Sam. 22: 21; Psalm 18: 21, 25). Our word borax and the name of the chemical element boron were most clearly etymologically derived from the old Semitic root bōr. A nice aspect is also, that boron is a very special element, relatively scarce in our solar system; predominantly in traces from comets, so from outside. Remarkable as well is the form in which it appears, amongst others in the form of glass-like crystals. It is also used in glass to make it more heat-resistant (Pyrex glass) and plays a role in the production of lcd-screens and protective clothes (bullet-proof vests). The boron-compound triethylboron is applied in the ignition of rocket engines because it burns so incredibly hot and intense. The crystal-/ glass-like and the extraterrestrial origin the heavenly house of God, or of the New Jerushalem that is a sort of ‘house of God’ as well…
For some words that are used only once or a few times in the Bible, and where earlier translators have largely guessed a meaning from the context, the old Semitic often provides a good insight. Take for example the word בתה - batah/battah [1326-7]. The first form only occurs in Yesha-Yahu (Isaiah) 5:6; the second in 7:19. The standard BDB and Strong’s dictionaries available in most Bible software relate it to destruction and an old (hypothetical!) root verb: ‘to break into pieces’. The KJV translates ‘waste’ and ‘desolate’ respectively. I see and remember that the
was a locked-up house representing a daughter that needed some protection to remain a virgin, and so hypothesize that honoring ( ) that, our word might just very well mean ‘untouched’ (‘virgin land’, unspoiled nature, still wildly overgrown, desolate or whatever). The KJV translations still seem okay in this case, but I see no need for a supposed root ‘to break into pieces’ here. The contexts of the verses seem to justify my point. For example (Is.5:6; note that even the clouds are not to ‘touch’ it): and I will lay it waste (בתה (; it shall not be pruned nor dug; but briers and thorns shall come up. And I will command the clouds that they rain no rain on it.
Talking about virginity, I consider the dictionary’s derivation of בתולה - bethulah (1330-1) much more complicated than that of the old Semitic form
- a daughter of (connected to) an honorable leader (or a daughter, sure to be admired/appreciated by a secure leader – a skilled/worthy man; the ‘pin’ can also stand for a certain body part of such a prospective admirer). The old Semitic is decent and not as explicit as modern youth culture and its language, but it wasn’t as prudish as our culture was before the ’60-s of the last century; it mentioned even the more ‘private’ things in somewhat ‘covered’ terms, and sometimes these could be interpreted in various ways, but the meaning came across clearly enough, even in a few signs.

In the discussion of the letters I mentioned a few meanings of the word ’aleph. Something struck me when I looked up the Arabic equivalent. The three-letter Arabic word equivalent with אלף is: الف - ilf (with as variant: اليف – alīf) – intimate; good friend, loved one. Understandable from the old Semitic symbols:

- the mouth (and hand, with alīf) of the first leader. Apparently, the early Arabs associated someone’s mouth primarily with kissing, while the Jews thought primarily of teaching (only with the Hebrew variant 441אלוף] אלף/] - ’alluph - the mouth connected to the first leader – one encounters in the dictionary, next to the meanings ‘boss’ and ‘tame/docile’ also: ‘(close) friend’; the last two also with the Arabic الوف – alūf, that can also mean ‘attached, faithful, dedicated’). That is clearly a somewhat different accent in those cultures…

By the way, I see much similarity between ilf/alīf and the Dutch ‘lief’ (lovely, loving), in terms of the letters and the meaning (in particular in Flanders ‘lief’ is also used as a noun, for a loved one… Looks like good food for Mr. Mozeson)… By which I am back also – in a different way, namely via love – at the ’aleph as ‘first’! Even the symbol appears already to have that connotation of ‘first’ in the sense of ‘most intimately loved’ or ‘the one you are most attached to’, such that we can actually learn something of those early Arabs and can explain all those words like ’El (God), ’abh (father), ’am (mother) and ’ishah (woman/wife) along this line as well.

Sometimes the significance for Bible-explanation is limited, but a old Semitic explanation may remind us of more familiar vocabulary. That I encountered e.g. in

literally e.g. as: the rising (growing) shell (clothes) of your children (growing, but still small). Those clothes were most easily made of cotton. Indeed: the two appear to be related, via the Arabic (and, I assume: old Semitic) qutun! Looking at how cotton grows,

, as being ‘the growing/ raising shell of the seed’, is a very good description of cotton growing in the cotton boll around the seed indeed, so in combination with the Arabic qutun and an Akkadian kataanu - small, thin, flat (of textile fibers!), I do not rule out this remarkable old Semitic explanation and origin!

Cotton was indeed already grown around 3000 BC in Egypt (probably still earlier already in India, China,

Peru), and so it must have been known at the time of the patriarchs in that region. By the way,

Internet-blog author Balashon then asks: why is the current Hebrew word for cotton - כותנה - kutna, written so differently? With reference to Klein he lays a link between kutna and the Aramaic כיתן kitan - flax, linen (a is how flax was prepared [?]) and the Hebrew כתנת - kutonet - coat (from which: tunic), originally made of linen, according to Klein, while e.g. a Jewish qittel was actually made of cotton. An old Hebrew name for the cotton plant was צמר גפן - tsemer gephen - wool of the grape (possibly because the leaves looked like those of the vine [?]).

An even nicer example of this I found our word ‘notes’ (music) and ‘note’ (incl.: to note, block note, etc.). Did you ever know that this is probably from Proto-Semitic descent? In Arabic that original form still exists: نوت - not – musical note, and نوتة - nota – note, remark (in Dutch a nota is a bill; bills were among the earliest writings/inscriptions found so far). old Semitic:

- what comes forth from using a pin (with sharp point) to put marks/signs; so: the writings; yes, especially that hastily scribbled

'note'. 136 ☺

Interesting is the Hebrew word for 'sun': שֶׁמֶשׁ

- shemesh. When studying the old Semitic form of it, I noticed that the sin/samekh and the shin were confused here already early in the development of the Semitic languages (e.g.: Hebrew: two shin's, Maltese: two sin's, Old South Arabian and reconstructed Proto-Semitic: a shin and a sin). The explanation for that can apparently be found in the meaning of the symbols. Both forms – with sin/samekh and with shin – seem to be a cry-out by someone who walks in the hot desert sun already too long: a call for a source/well ( ) and/or a palm tree ( ), and

). At a well/oasis there were palm trees and where palm trees grew, there often was a well (or you could tap some palm juice), such that these two are indeed equivalent here and can enforce each other. Remarkable is that indeed this old word stood especially for the heat of the sun.

Possible interpretations… a note on how to arrive at them

The interpretations that I give in the above list with the meanings (Table 2), are possible interpretations. Historicall confidence, a lot more research would be needed, if it is possible at all, after all these millennia. Yet I wanted to do my best to arrive at least at the most realistic interpretation attainable within the frame of this study. There are words of which it is not easy to determine such a most realistic interpretation, for example because there are multiple explanations possible that – on first sight – all look equally plausible. Such a situation demands a little deeper investigation, both of the usage of the words in the Bible, and of customs from those days and those circumstances.

Take for example the words 2616-2617 חסד]] - chacad, checed, and 2623 חס' ד]] - chacid. The meanings according to the dictionary are: chacad – being loyal, faithful, mercyful, friendly / being reproached or admonished; checed - friendliness, faithfulness / shame; chacid – friendly, spiritually devoted. How do these correspond to the old Semitic forms:

? By imagining myself even a little bit in that situation, I could read in

: move the border/skin (interpreted naively as: the outside of the trunk) of a palm tree by hand – hoping, of course, that it drops some of its fruits. If he does so, your action is successful. The palm tree was 'friendly', or 'faithful' to you, we might say. With some effort I can see the shaking as reproaching or admonition of the stubborn trunk, but the shame-aspect is not in it. If I dig a bit deeper, I discover from other word meanings and some study of palm trees, that the skin, outside or cover ( ) of a palm tree quite likely is not referring to the outside of the trunk, but to the 'skirt' of dried and into each other entangled palm branches/leaves, just below the top, above which are the living branches and the fruits. In addition, I can think somewhat more specific clusters. In order to do so, you have to remove that obstructing 'skirt' of the (stubborn!) palm tree, before the sweet fruits become reachable (unless you visit it regularly and maintain it well, in which case it is a lot easier). The palm tree that allows that is not stubborn but again graceful, friendly and loyal. That removing of the 'skirt' of awkward dead palm leaves with their sharp edges, is easy to relate to the removal of stubbornness by admonition. The palm tree then looses a piece of shell/'clothing' (for which the often stands); it stands a bit 'naked' then, which also makes the connotation with shame a bit more obvious (apart from via admonition or reproach). And in that way it makes this explanation more plausible than the first one. Next to this, with a verb one has to take into account the inflections that actually appear in the Bible. These appear to go along quite will with this last explanation here.

Still two other explanations are possible here as well: Houses of rich people, kings, etc. were usually surrounded by palm trees.
might represent entering ( ) the circumference or border (

formed by those palm trees ( ), as a special favor granted. However, in this case, only the hiph‘il form (make someone else enter) would be supported with a meaning associated to ‘grace’ or ‘goodness’. And the ‘shame’ me is positioned between a wall and a door; it can be regarded as serving as a doorpost. The doorpost was usually bent at the top, such that both doorposts came together there. By this doorpost, a servant may have been standing, who welcomed everybody in. From this bent post or the bowing servant, chesed might have come to stand for having a bent neck, that is for nodding friendly to someone of lower standing. The bending of the neck or head can, of course, also be related to shame, such that this might provide another viable explanation. 137

To finish this part…
What is so nice about this way of reading/studying the Hebrew words, I consider that it is so much in tune with the life of the Bible and those times. Besides, using the pictures of the old Semitic script as a study aid, I find that I can much more easily remember the meaning of many Hebrew words. To illustrate that, I gave the above list of words and their possible interpretation/re-construction from the old Semitic pictograms.
Regularly I am still extending and updating this list (suggestions are most welcome!), and checking it with other Semitic languages, as Arabic, in which even the oldest Proto-Semitic is often better conserved. The study of culture, customs, habits and languages of those days also continues and may yield new or additional insights.

Gen.4:26 when Enosh was born, it is also recorded that the people started to call on the Name of YaHUaH – the glorious Name expressing that God wants to be with His people. According to some MSS, he, Enosh, was the first to call on the Name of YaHUaH.

It is not clear whether this is her Egyptian name, or a Semitic translation of it.

Commonly considered to be of Persian (a Semitic language as well) origin; if that is right, the observation that in this script this name is so fitting to Esther's life goal is a clear sign of God's sovereignty!

The offspring of the northern state of Israel still worship and offer sacrifices to God there…
The Arabic spelling هابيل - Hābīl has an additional aleph and yod in it. The aleph appears to be original. The Akkadian ablu - son may well be derived from Abel's name. From Akkadian it is clear that īl is a variant of'El, such that the Arabic confirms my explanation here.
Not without reason after his tragic death his name – stripped of the first joyful-worship sign (!), the became a word for 'to bewail, lament, mourn': 56אבל]] - 'abhal/'abhel. I suspect that on any moment, for a clear distinction (or in the harmonisation to three letter words) the 'aleph was dropped from Abel's name.

With the births of many people, the Bible gives an explanation of his or her name, often spoken by one of the parents. It is often thought that Abel is an exception to this, but that appears not so. At the birth of Cain and Abel Eve explains the name of Cain and speaks her appreciation for YaHUaH, thereby explaining Abel's name as well. His later profession / the workplace in which he rejoiced is related to his name; see 'ābhēl [58].

In the usual explanation his name is seen as derived from yācaph – to change, to add, and explained as ‘let him add’ or: ‘yet another’ (Rachel was jealous at Leah with her sons, and at Joseph’s birth she wanted also still another son like him). The origin of yācaph can very well be sought in the meaning: ‘he gives an opening to new life’, certainly in a context of getting more children, which from early on became the way in Israel to yet have some kind of eternal life (with the palm tree as symbol of the Tree of Life, and thus for ‘life eternal’).

The dates (Hebr. duda’im) of the date palm were (and still are) seen in the Middle East as very conducive for – in particular male – fertility and sexual urge (cf. Song of S. 7: 7-8); almost certainly these were the fruits for which Leah bought a night sleeping with Jacob, from Rachel. The ‘bunchy’ way they grow looks like a basket (2nd meaning of duda’im; cf. also Jer.24:1), which confirms this theory. Probably because of the connotation with eating (shin as breasts, teeth or bow) and/or fondling (shin as breasts) the sin and not the samekh was chosen here, when this letter sort of ‘spliced’ into these two.

153

Like the Syro-Phenician woman later with Jesus, he also had a faithful and subjecting attitude towards God like a servile dog (keleb - blessing heart / blessing for the house of his master).

154

In the notion in his name that one descendant sees the other, I see a link with the usual translation: ‘lowland’.

155

Both Abraham and Jacob went to Egypt in a time of famine for wheat/grain! The Nile-delta was renowned for its successful reed-, grain- and papyrus culture, while cotton flourished as well in Egypt (possibly even was invented there). In Arabic Egypt is still مصر - Mitsr. The name Egypt is derived from the Greek Αἴγυπτος - Aígyptos, from Hikuptah (Memphis), a mutilation of the old Egyptian name Chwt-ka-Ptach - house of the ka (soul) of Ptah, the name of a temple for the idol/god Ptah in Memphis. The word Coptic is derived from an early Greek form as well.

The forms MAPIA and MAPIAM are the Greek forms as appearing in the New Testament.
The first two letters (Mar) in Semitic languages also denote ‘Lord’/‘Master’/‘Highest God’, such that the explanation becomes that the Highest God provided her to be a mother.
Note that my explanation of her name is very different from the Jewish one. That one sees her name (without the ’aleph in it) as: rebellion… (from marah, which already underwent a drastic change of meaning itself)! The difference is quite embarrassing! By the way, that explanation rebellion stems from the explanation bitter, actually: brine, to be traced back to: (salt) water ( ) from God’s (; i.e. the great) sea ( ). (She was – even according that explanation – salt, i.e. spicy/hot/lively/spirited at most, not bitter.) Concerning the name of Miriam (Moses’ sister): she was literally the other at the water, providing a mother… I consider these explanations really better fitting than those of ‘rebellion’ or ‘bitterness’…

Josephus Flavius had another explanation: „Hereupon it was that Thermuthis imposed this name Mouses upon him, from what had happened when he was put into the river; for the Egyptians call water by the name of Mo, and such as are saved out of it, by the name of Uses: so by putting these two words together, they imposed this name upon him.” (Antiquities of the Jews II: hst 9, pt.6; p.238; see also: Against Apion I:286). Josephus was partly right, for the first part of Moses’ name (mu) indeed meant water in Egyptian, as affirmed by Philo c but for ‘son’, as in Ramses (son of Ra‘, the sun god), Ahmose (according Gerard Gertoux: son of Jah, honored there as moon god). In this way Moses was seen by the prinses as son of the water-god, the Nile. The Egyptian explanation of his name differed from the Semitic one with a double meaning (bodily and prophetic given by his parents, led by God).

158

It is at least remarkable that the name of Noah is composed of the same two letters as the original root of grace/compassion: ן ח - chen. God allowed him and his family to survive, while the rest of the world went down. This letter combination is contained in more spiritually and historically significant names: Enoch (/Chenokh - חנך - grace reigns), Hannah (/Channah - חנה – rejoice about grace / grace in feminine form), and Yahu-chanan/Yochanan/John in this list, and still many others.

Strong’s dictionary says: “probably of foreign origin”! BDB guesses: “"rebellion" or "the valiant""; while the most obvious old Semitic explanation is so simple, and fitting and appropriate in the context…

The usual explanation from the Egyptian hieroglyphs pr ‘3 is that the title is derived from ‘great house’ (as in USA English ‘the White House’ coming to represent the President or Government.
One can pose the question how the Semitic interpretation could fit so well. An explanation is that the Semitic form is inspired by phonological likeness and an effort to give a reasonable explanation to those sounds. In addition, around the beginning of the second millennium BC Egyptian had not evolved as far from the Semitic languages, to which it was related in ancient times (Abraham and Joseph could somehow understand it and make themselves understood there!); this was amplified by trade. Many Egyptian words could therefore still be in some accordance with the build-up of words from basic notions and their sounds, even when quite another script was used there.

Cf. e.g.. Deut 32: 3-7; Jer. 23: 5; Zef. 3: 5; Acts 3: 14; 22: 14; 1 John 2: 1.

162

The symbols, grain - hand - stick - seed, remind us also of the threshing of grain – something not pleasant for the grainstems in the metaphor, but certainly useful in the end (cf. Isa. 64: 10; Jer. 4: 31; 26: 18; 31: 12; Micha 3: 12; 4: 10-13).
In Arabic (صهيون - Tsahiun) this word has an extra āh/hē – there it is a holy/praiseworthy pressing out, or it is the life being pressed out, and the Righteous One, Whom we worship, respectively.

In history, many have wrestled with this name or title. A well fitting Egyptian name has not been found for long. Fürst cites Brugsch, who explains it as ‘p-so-nto-p-ench = prince of the life of the world’. Brown, Driver, Briggs & Gesenius say it would be Egyptian for: ‘the god speaks and he lives’. Others, especially textcritical people wł secrets’. The Septuagint has its own interpretation: Ψονθομφανηχ - Psonthomphanech what has been explained by Judaist rabbi’s as: Soter Cosmon – the Savior of the World. Paneach can be read as

In Hebrew the name can be related to the words: tsaphan = to hide, to cover, to hoard, to store, to treasure up (from tsiphon (with wav = o) = darkness); and pa‘neach = (according to Fürst:) in Pihel: to discover, to brighten up, to make clear, what comes down to about the earlier explanation from Coptic.
Prof. Pascal Vernus, in his Dictionnaire amoureux de l'Égypte pharaonique, éditions Plon, 2009, (ISBN 9782-259-19091-6), name Djed-panotcher-ioufânkh - Le-dieu-a-dit-qu’il-vivra - The God has said that he shall live. Djed, he says, is the past tense of the verb to speak; transformed to Tsa in Hebrew, for the d of Djed had disappeared from the pronunciation already for long. Normally, then follows the name of the God; Panotcher here is ‘God’ in general, to do justice to Joseph’s monotheism. And iouf is put into Hebrew in the form ph; the prefix of the 3e futurum, third person singular; the personal pronoun -f, he, refers to the carrier of the name. Finally: ânkh, translated to neach in Hebrew, is the verb to live, in the infinitive after the prefix iouf. This explanation and translation I find very remarkable, because the God of the Bible is notorious: (1) for His speaking with authority, and (2) for His living / being there – the old verb hawah that is connected to the glorious Name YaHUaH.
The explanation from the old signs adds to that a remarkable association which any Semite could have with this name.
In Arabic ایر ا - ’air (old Semitic: the prominent/primary hand/arm/side-branch of the other) is a euphemism for the masculine member.
165
In Arabic a qjn (same old Semitic form as Qayin) is a (metal) smith – that is also someone who raises his hand to hit something hard; the same root is used for the verb ‘to forge’ as well.
166
The regular explanation of her name is something like ‘ensnarer’ (on rather vague grounds). The symbols denote that God lived in her and that she regularly went up to worship Him. She came from a God fearing family – a.o. her brother Laban appeared to know YaHUaH as well.
167
Via the light connotation with rea‘/righ [7453] - friend (as another who embraces you) there is also a link with a house of a friend, i.e. a friendly, welcoming, spacious house that is around you and protects you.
168
The Greek form with gamma is a strong indication that the ‘ayin here was originally a ghayin.

This concerns probably a part of the present Ethiopia together with Yemen. The description fits: for a very long time the houses there were made of reed (in the Tihama plain in Yemen and in certain areas of Ethiopia even up to the present day). The name is also translated as: Morning-land. The presented Arabic form is the older one. The more modern Arabic form is سبأ - Sabā'.
Probably the Biblical Shebā' is this Tsebāch / Sabā' - the land of the Sabeans, with its own Semitic language and script (a form of Old South Arabic).
Even the Quran has a description of the visit of the queen of this land Saba' to Suleiman (Shelomoh/ Solomon), and her conversion to the monotheism i.e. to the God of Suleiman.
By the way, it is said that this صباح - Tsabāch / سبأ - Sabā' even is the basis of the name of the Dutch Caribbean island of Saba.

I suspect that the nun at the end could be original, and that this later became an āh/hē to honor him – something simila respect to that āh/hē. An original form could have been Shalman or Shulman. It is written of him that God YaHUaH loved him and gave him the name Yedid-Yah - loved by YaH. Unfortunately, he diverted heavily from God later in his life.
ַShalmaneser [8022] or, more precise Shulmanu-asharedu or ShulmanuCompare also the name שַׁלְמַנְאסָר asharid – the preeminent Shulman or the Shulman of Asshur, a popular name of kings of Asshur/Assyria (more often Assyria/Asshur (אַשּׁוּר(is written in Hebrew names as אסר as if it was just a primary prince-dom,

At various instances Sarah got Abraham into trouble, a.o. with her suggestion for adultery with Hagar!
Or, closer to the usual interpretation: a 'palm tree of God' as a symbol of princely power, unassailability or authority (Sar), and then the feminine form of that (suffixed āh): princess.

The first known Tāmār from the Bible was the wife of 'Er (Gen. 38). When he died, his brothers refused to fulfil their plight to have intercourse with her and to care for offspring as a substitute for 'Er; even their father Jehudah was lax. Finally Tāmār dressed herself as a whore, seduced Jehudah and cared for offspring that way (the twins Perets and Zerach). When Jehudah heard that his daughter in law had presented herself as a whore and was pregnant, he wanted that she be burned alive! However, she presented proof as sign that he himself was the one who had left his sperm in her. In that sense, her name: sign of 'water' from the other (with the connotation Tree of Life / fertility) got a very special additional meaning. Remarkably, she got to be included into the ancestry of Yeshu'ah (Mat. 1: 3)!

The life of that other Tāmār – daughter of David (2 Sam.13) – was marked (in a negative sense) by such ‘water’ from an other. She was raped by her halfbrother ’Amnon.

Concerning the Names and titles of God YaHUaH still something else. The concept of YaHUaH as One Who unites we see in a word that is applied several times to Him, especially in a context where He brings together very large groups or multitudes of people: צְבָאוֹת -Tsebha’oth, from צבא - tsabha – to bring together a multitude, or such a gathered multitude as such; Julius Fürst174 gave as first meaning of this word: “to join together, to be assembled, to flock together, to be united, into a crowd, for the purpose of service”. The term may refer to very large bunches of reed stems ( ) that were gathered for first generation houses/huts ( ), or to the need to first ( ) provide some covering against the sun ( ), before gathering a lot of people. The use in Genesis 2:1 and Nehemiah 9:6 defies the common ‘military’ translation as army/armies; in Isaiah 13:4 the addition of הַמְחַלְמַ is needed to make such a multitude into an army. So, we see that YaHUaH is a God Who brings people together – recognizable throughout the entire Bible!

Many names, like לְ

5, have traditionally been derived well. Many other names from the earliest ages – like Enoch (see explanation in Table speak of the faith of the parents and/or their deep reverence for God. In translations (and even in the Hebrew square script) unfortunately this can no longer be recognized.

I observe, that even the majority of the names from the earliest ages get a meaning in the old Semitic script that is understandable, fitting and significant in the context of the story (see e.g. the explanation for Eve, Ca names that were significant in meaning, when written down in the old Semitic script. This is most interesting, for this sudden making those times less ‘pre-historic’!) Like the well-known Bible scholar Professor P.J. Wiseman and others have convincingly shown concerning Genesis, Moses has mainly edited the already existing literature into one toledoth - תולדות ; we see here the Leader/Shepherd (God) moving (leading all that happens), surrounded by cross-signs c that, that it can be said that He ‘writes’ history (cf. tavah in Table 2.). I look up to Him in total awe...

This also solves a problem that some linguists have with this script as a pictures-script, because at the time of Noah the script and its underlying notions were already there, while there were few inhabitants of the earth to maintain a large vocabulary in words or sounds. The development of the spoken language since Noah is strongly influenced by this script and most words have been developed gradually from this compact set of symbols…!

And since about 1000 BC onward a large part of the world profited greatly in its development from this very ancient set of symbols…

This is a reason for me to call this script old Semitic or even Proto-Semitic and not just Canaanite or Proto-West-Semitic.

The old West-Semitic script: even more universal than expected
Very often, even Biblical names of which I didn't expect it, have a significant meaning when transliterated into the old super-natural great design is behind this. Look at a wonderful Name like Immanu-El. Linguistically, the 'Immanu' is in fact almost entirely grammatical in-/deflection. And yet…
- what do we read here? "He sees a lot of seed/offspring, with secure bonding to the First/Highest Leader/ Shepherd/ 'LORD'". Isn't that completely and very accurately right? For example the 'He sees a lot of offspring' we encounter almost literally in Yesha-Yahu (Isaiah) 53: 10. "Yet it was the will of YaHUaH to bruise Him; He has put Him to grief; when He makes Himself an offering for sin, He shall see his offspring, He shall prolong His days; the will of YaHUaH shall prosper in His hand." These kinds of coherences, things that fit 'just right' into the whole picture, make me really enthusiastic about the God of the Bible and about this very special, old script! ☺

The old West-Semitic script: script of religion and culture
In my research I encountered also two interesting articles by Prof. Seth Sanders.176 In those he draws attention to the unique position of the old Semitic script as a script that was used for other things than for example the cuneiform, that was used especially for political and commercial (accounting) purposes and not always tied to mastery of the respective spoken language. However, the old Semitic script served a purpose that was related to the local culture of the own people in its full width. Many inscriptions have the character of modern graffiti: "I was here!", or of a local literature, as learning to know themselves as a people. They also contain many elements of worship towards the godhead 175 See e.g.: Damien F. Mackey, The First Book of Moses and the 'Toledoth' of Genesis (also in German), and the numerous good references therein, in particular the works of P.J. Wiseman.

176 Seth L. Sanders, 'What was the Alphabet for? The Rise of Written Vernaculars and the Making of Israelite National Literature', Maarav, 11,1; 2004; p.25-56; and 'Writing and Early Iron Age Israel: Before National Scripts, Beyond Nations and States', in: Tappy and McCarter, eds., Literate Culture and 10th-Century Canaan.

served by their own people. This corresponds closely with the written Word of the Bible – there, too, we see that mixture of worshipping God and as an adolescent learning to know themselves as people and learning to express themselves: "how do we do this?"

The old West-Semitic script: source of many scripts
In the introduction and with the discussion of the letters I already mentioned that the Greek script was developed from the Phoenician branch of old Semitic, and from that also our Latin script and the Cyrillic script developed.
Even before that – in the 13e century BC – a cuneiform script arose in Ugarit (at the spot of or close to the Syrian village Ras Shamra; discovered there during excavations in 1929) that differs from the other forms of cuneiform scripts. Those other forms were pictographic and had many signs, but this one had less than 30. From the shape of the signs one can conclude that they were derived from the old and the samekh like this:

– in which the likeness with the Phoenician versions (and Ɔ(is clearly recognized. The language of Ugarit was a Semitic language strongly resembling Phoenician.

A note on the notions

It is remarkable, that many of the notions can still be discerned in our current language (sometimes via their hellenized name). In a group of animals the alpha-male is the first, the leader. Beta-subjects have to do with concrete, physical things like housing construction (the first beta-study at university level in the Netherlands was civil engineering). Gamma-radiation goes through a lot of things. A riverdelta is the triar still do with our hands raised. Even linguistically a pin is something on which everything hinges or the thing that keeps other things together (linking pin). Dutch versions of words like scythe and sword (zeis and zwaard) start with a z. When we cannot get a good grip or handle on something, we say that we do not understand a iota of it. Words for important rulers like king start with a k. Leader starts with an l. The average, the value around which most observations are positioned, is denoted by μ - mu, and think also of our word more (and the German Mer!). Seed is – just like that old nun – still both that little plant stuff being sown into the ground, and human offspring. Φ - Phi (from pu, with some of quph) is the symbol for flux in electricity. In organic chemistry they speak of a sigmabinding. Et cetera…

Chinese connections…?

In this document so far, it has become clear that the old Semitic script had an enormous impact on the western scripts. But its tentacles do not only reach westward, or so it appears…

Before I started this study, I was not aware that the Bible refers to China or the Chinese. Yet it does. A prophesy in Yesha-Yahu (Isaiah) 49:12 mentions the very interesting word 5515סִינִים]] Cinim (in the Bible only occurring China (some also those of (Western) America – the Indians). I found that Persian Cin, related to Sanskrit चीन - Cinah, refers to China. Since Marco Polo this is the root of broad western usage of ‘China’ as designation of that country.177 The reference to Chinese in Yesha-Yahu’s book as Cinim is remarkable, because in a common view, the etymology of the name China goes back to the Qin dynasty, about 200 BC, centuries after Yesha-Yahu. So Yesha-Yahu’s text is indeed to be interpreted as prophetically inspired here (it speaks of the far future!), and/or he must have known of the far less prominent feudal kingdom Qin (Tshin) in Shen-si, one of the western provinces of China (from the beginning of the 9th century BC; reported by Keil & Delitzsch in their comment on the passage). What strikes me, is the Qin (Tshin) symbol: 秦 , which depicts two hands husking wheat – a grain or rice-plant carrying seed. The middle part of old Semitic Sinim consists of two hands surrounding a seed:

… When we remember that tsade and sin were sometimes confused, and/or think of an old Semitic transliteration of the Chinese Tshin:

, we have a papyrus, sedge or wheat-like plant, a hand and the grain or

177

According to some scholars in Proto-Indo-European, Persian and Sanskrit belong to the descendants of this hypothetical language. I have not studied this in detail yet, but I did encounter several similarities between Proto-Indo-European and the notions in the roots of Proto-Semitic; the small set of reconstructed Proto-Indo-Eur meaning of the pictographic symbols in an old Semitic transliteration (e.g. Proto-Indo-European ued = to

Discussion and some first conclusions from this study
From this investigation some remarkable conclusions can be drawn:
• The old Semitic script, mother of almost all alphabet scripts in the world, had a pictographic/ideographic origin.
• The original symbols represent both a sound (phonemic value) as a basic notion; these basic notions function as building blocks in the build-up of the original language. Some of these building blocks (in particular the one represented by the samekh/sin) were identified and illustrated for the first time • Personal and other names from the first chapters of Genesis reveal that the roots of the original symbols and/or the underlying building blocks in the earliest version of the Proto-Semitic language go back to the first • Knowledge of the set of basic notions under the symbols, in combination with knowledge of the local culture and nature often gives a good view at a likely etymology and meaning of most old Semitic (especially Biblical Hebrew, Aramaic and Arabic) words (sometimes even Greek words as well), and greatly enhances our view on the Bible in its entirety as an amazing unity.
• The old Semitic script presented in the recognizable symbols something of the meaning of the constituted words, such that various associations and connotations were kept intact quite naturally. At the transition t least in part. Even more has been lost at the transition to the square script, which is derived from the – spiritually seen – degenerated Imperial Aramaic script. Something similar counts for Arabic.
Remarkable are the eras in which these degenerations took place: the onset of the first was around the time that Israel became a kingdom, a transition to which God agreed only reluctantly; the second after a period of severe spiritual decay, in the last centuries of the First Testament of the Bible.
• It is a great pity that the First Testament of the Bible is often regarded and studied as if it was written in the Hebrew square script. Reconstruction of the text in the original old Semitic form could clarify considerably the parts from before the time of Solomon, or even all from before the Babylonian exile. Some more thorough knowledge of the old Semitic script and the underlying basic structure should be a mandatory subject in theological training at universities. It provides such a clear light on the etymology and meaning of many words and on many relationships between what is expressed at different places in the text...

Noteworthy with all of this is that this old language was such a physical language, strongly related to important things from a practical nomadic existence full of reverence for God (in contrast to the later Greek which was more a language of the intellect with much more abstraction and less relation).

What I appreciate about the way of interpreting and reading the Hebrew words like it is demonstrated here is that it links so closely with the life in the time of the Biblical narrative, especially that of before the first millennium BC.

As noted earlier: the unity between the letters/signs (graphemes) as pictograms and ideograms (with meanings) and as letters of an alphabet has not yet been explained by linguists or archeologists. I cannot explain it fully either, but I do see it as a reflection of the great unity that is so characteristic for YaHU aH , the God of the Bible. In the Bible and its language there is a unity that surpasses our understanding. The more we discover, the more there remains to be discovered.

The very early Aleph-Beth: an alphabet… or perhaps a story…?

In the first part of this article we saw that the very old Hebrew/ old Semitic script existed of a series of pictures, each with a specific meaning. I summarize them here:

aleph – ox-head: first / powerful one

chet – (tent)wall; also:
limit, skin, boundary

beth – tent-map; tent/house/body

teth – earthen basket, hull, wrapper, shell

gimel – foot; also: to go, transport

yad/yod – hand, arm

samekh – palm tree, thorny plant, hardship, protection, high ayin – eye; to see (to),

to (be) show(n)

pei – (mouth) opening

daleth – door, opening;

movement, to move

kaph – raised, reigning or blessing hand, power, authority

hei – man with arms lifted; joy, wonder, worship

lamed – shepherd’s staff; shepherd, leader

qoph – rising sun, to rise, circle

mem – water; abundance, much, plural

resh – face; (an) other (sometimes: God)

nun – sprouting seed, offspring, life, ‘what emerges from …’

shin – breasts, 2 teeth, or (shooting) bow; to eat, food, source wav – tent pin; also:

little stick, security, bonding/connection
zayin – scythe, sword, knife; to cut, metal tsade – plant (papyrus, reed, sedge or wheat)

tav – sign, signature, fixed, finish/end

When put in a row next to or under each other like here, many see an aleph-beth; an alphabet.
However, this sequence of signs can also, and pretty easily, be read as a simple story:
aleph beth – The first of the house:
our (fore)father (Abraham)
gimel daleth –stood on his feet (/saddled his camels) and started to move;

hei – he worshipped God and followed Him with joy, wav – God gave him security in a covenant (secure bond); zayin chet teth – he cut the border/skin of his wrapper/shell

yad kaph – put his hand/arm in the reigning/ blessing hand of lamed - the big Shepherd/

Leader (God), Who…

mem nun samekh – promised him abundance of offspring and (unexpected!) fertility;

ayin – God showed him:

pei tsade – an open place [land] to live, with plenty plants & shade /

an open Papyrus-scroll (Torah!)

up to the Other – His Source.

tav – And so it really happened and was fulfilled / undersigned: God/Yeshu‘ah.

In that stone that has been found with the aleph-beth on it, as a linguist one can read an abecedary.

As God-worshipping person – descendant/offspring of Abraham – one can also stand in wonder and see a summary of the story about our fore-father Abraham in it…

It’s just a matter of what you believe, or from which starting point you leave in the first place…

I get strongly the impression that the Psalmist has let himself be guided in the stream of his thoughts not only by the letters themselves, but also by the underlying notions.
Something similar we also encounter in Psalm 37, 111, 119 and 145 (in the version known to us the nun is missing), a little less in Psalm 112 (acrostics as well), and very clearly in the very nice acrostic on the highly praised wife in Proverbs 31: 10-31.

So, these acrostics contain important insight about the 22 letters and the underlying notions.

Hebrew: a developing language, already since earliest times
What I wrote in the introduction on the relatively young age of the Hebrew square script has big consequences for our study of the Hebrew language. The pronunciation known to the Masoretes in the Middle Ages, may differ vastly from to original pronunciation. Sometimes also the meaning of words has experienced considerable development.180
The development of Biblical Hebrew: Hebrew language and Hebrew script has been complex and a lot remains so far unknown. What we can say about it predominantly has the character of hypotheses: more or less likely suppositions about how this development may have ensued. Regional and temporal variations sometimes script, in which the letters have only their symbolic letter function and no meaning on their own. The fact that the letters are symbols with a clear pictographic origin, makes us assume that they could represent a meaning of their own. This study investigates the hypothesis, that old Semitic could originally have been a pictographic/ideographic script, of which the meanings of the letters are recognizable in the mea
In my study of this material I came across a lot of wild theories. Few seemed to have investigated so many sources – almost all inscriptions and languages from the old Middle East – so extensively, as the Australian (living in New Zealand) Dr Brian E. Colless. He studied, analyzed and deciphered many archeological findings of scripts from the second millennium BC.181 He concludes that the earliest forms of the old Semitic script are not yet an alphabet script, but clearly sees logosyllabic and pictographic elements Remarkable I find that various scientists, on the basis of extensive analyses have concluded that the oldest forms of Hebrew find their very earliest origins probably in or around the city of Ur (remarkable, because accord

From this shape and the words (in all Semitic languages) containing the hei, the basic meanings of this symbol can be reconstructed with quite some clarity: worship (hillul still is the Hebrew word for praising), joy, wonder, seeing (something beautiful), (obtaining) breath, living/thriving. In Paleo-Hebrew (at that time the script had become a clear alphabetscript) only th

In the first centuries AD the Rabbi’s have adjusted and changed a lot. During a Dutch seminar of the Jewish Levisson Institute at sunday 9 april 2006 about Father-Jews Prof dr P. van der Horst said about the introduction of the Rabbi's there and then in Mishna and Talmudim: "it is typically an afterwards searched biblical founding for an already existing practice, like we encounter everywhere in the rabbinical literature, but which does not make sense from a historical viewpoint".

See a.o. his extensive web logs at sites.google.com/site/collesseum and cryptcracker.blogspot.com/ . In 'The Evolution of the Alphabet' (web document) Brian E. Colless notes: "It is not known precisely when the Canaanite syllabary was invented (attested at Umm el-Marra [Tuba?] around 2300 BCE), but it presumably came into existence before the alphabet, and it was another step in the evolution of writing, leading up to the alphabet." (emphasis added). Elsewhere in the same article he says: "What we have here is a possibility that no scholar has ever contemplated before: an alphabetic sign being used as a logograph, so that the whole word is read, not simply the initial consonant of the word." In other words: most scholars never looked well at the possibility of a logographic/ logo syllabic and/or pictographic/ideographic origin of the old Semitic script.

183

In 'The Evolution of the Alphabet' (web document) the earlier mentioned Brian E. Colless also hints to this. I further note, after the quote from the previous footnote, that, according tradition, Abraham on his journey from Ur, came (first via the Euphrates and then) along Umm el-Marra and the vicinity of Aleppo (Halab).

The yod, hey and wav are the letters that appear most frequent in the Torah; each about 10% of the total text – 10 times as much as e.g. the gimel or zayin.

Babylonian exile they did not believe anymore that God was still with His people here on earth (the original temple was destroyed and the ark had disappeared), but only distantly 'in heaven'. Hence, no lively and joyful interaction with God was left, only a looking forward to heaven. Notice in this change also the influence of Hellenism (the Greek thinking with vague mental concepts and despising of the body versus the very concrete old Biblical thinking in which the body had a beautiful place).185

The wav/vav largely held its shape and meaning in the development from the old Semitic to modern square script - from to ו. The original shape is a clear representation of a tent pin and its underlying notion of providing security or safety by connecting or fastening. However, the usage of the wav in Aramaic and Hebrew has been limited quite drastically over the ages. Amongst others the wav as the first letter of a word has been replaced – mainly by the yod.

- wayin – a fruit (seed)

on an branch (arm) of a vine (attaching stick in the ground) (our wine, German Wein, French vin and Dutch wijn all derive from this and still have a similar pronunciation). In some other Semitic languages (a.o. Arabic) it still is wayn (وين(, but in (post-exilic) Judaism it became yayin. A branch replaced the vine. We all know what Jesus said about grape branches/tendrils and the essence of being connected to the vine (in John 15 He compares Himself to a vine, He takes the initiative to connect and supply us with spiritual nourishment, such that we - as branches - can bear fruit). Why did He say this to that audience, and why days. Rabbinic Judaism (in association with their Aramaic speaking Babylonian 'friends'186) had disconnected itself fron

Another example is wad‘a – knowing, which became yad‘a; knowledge was no longer derived from a source but gained through one’s own effort. Also in the verb hawah ‘to be’/ ‘to live’/ ‘to breathe’: (living you do together in worship/wonder/joy and in secure attachment; note how the human figures are positioned around the wav as branches around the vine) the wav was replaced by a yod: hayah (it became a working or giving – the yod was the working, giving hand).
Remarkably, this lingual development is so much in line with their theological or social-psychological development: security and close connectedness with YaHUaH wasn’t experienced anymore, because to their idea God was no longer with them, but far away, and the afterlife was no longer obtained by the grace of God, but by works of many Mitswot – laws. This process had taken place long before in Babylon (hence Aramaic), and Judah had allowed itself to become infected when in exile there.
In relation to the wav I should also pointy to my earlier discussion of the light (- אור - ’or) that God created at the very beginning, in Genesis 1: 3. According the old Semitic symbols this light can be translated as ‘the first secure connection to the Other, i.e. to God, or to (one) another’.

Appendix 5.
Pictographic/ideographic and alphabet scripts: meaning versus sound
In the classification of scripts, there are a few distinct and mutually exclusive categories that linguists will discern.187 The most important distinction is that between seeing letters (‘graphemes’) as signs with a meaning or function, or as only representing a sound:
Pictographic/ideographic scripts; each ‘letter’ (grapheme) is a picture that stands originally for an object or idea. Words consist of one or more pictures, combining to the meaning of that word.
These scripts are often seen as unrelated to the verbal speech (sound) of the words. I loosely include here the categor contributes its meaning or modifying character to the constituted word.
Alphabet scripts and simple sound-based syllabaries; each letter stands originally for one specific sound (consonant or already existing in verbal speech) are written down, more or less according to their sounding (e.g. implicitly an alphabet script is assumed to be kind of a phonetic script in origin). Obviously, an alphabet script is closely related to the spoken language.

This either/or dichotomy stems from the invalid assumption that scripts are only later additions to already existing languages, and that their constituent building blocks in terms of meaning are unrelated to lingual (sou to have an underlying highly logical build-up or structure of basic notions with attached meanings and phonemes.

Good starting points appear to be essential in the analysis of the material!
Since the signs of the Paleo-Hebrew, very similar to the signs of Phoenician, were clearly an alphabet, and actually a few old Semitic abecedaries have been found, it is generally assumed that the old Semitic script has always been an alphabet script and only that. In this document I question that assumption. In my view, we do not have to think in either/or terms, as here, too. In the above division the two categories are sometimes assumed to be totally disjunctive. Therefore, a category that is remarkably not discerned in the above division is the category where each letter is both representing a sound and a picture with meaning. Also, a script is seen as static, as if it could not evolve from one category to another. In this document I present and test the hypothesis that the old Semitic (or Early First Testament Hebrew) fell originally exactly in the pictographic/ideographic category or the category where each letter is both representing a sound and a picture with meaning. Possibly it evolved over the ages slowly from a pictographic/ideographic script (or/via a logosyllabary) to the later Paleo-Hebrew pure alphabet Worldwide a lot of archeological and linguistic research is carried out on this subject, often by people who are better educated in this area than I am. How, then, can I dare to give my own vision here, and even one that is rather critical towards what some respected scholars say or said?
The answer to that question lies in the belief system that is taken as a starting point in the analysis of the actual findings. In my study I start from the Bible, from the God of the Bible, and from how I have come to know Him – His Character and His way of doing things. That means, amongst others, that I validate and check my interpretations on the basis of the Bible. Next, I have been in scientific research since 1980 and have experienced that any science has its ‘schools’ that often are rather ‘solitary-minded’ (meaning they are not open to another reading of the facts). Often only those conclusions are drawn that confirm the status quo of the own theory.
Concerning the old Semitic script as discussed here I made a few simple and factual observations, on which I have based my further analyses:
• The texts and fragments found so far date from the period 1900-1000 before Christ;188 it cannot be verified where the source of this script lies. Many scholars think that the old Semitic script is inspired on Egyptian hieroglyphs or on the simplified Egyptian Hieratic script (Egypt and its hieroglyphs enjoy a lot of this even slightly plausible. Apparently, such claims cannot be sustained (there even is a lot speaking against the hypothesis that this would be the case; remarkably the period in which this script

The brevity of this text, aimed at a broad audience, will – by its nature – not do honor to all the nuances that are there for the specialists; I apologize to the linguist who may find some important detail not described totally accurately in all detail here.

would have emerged has shifted further back with every earlier find during the past century; the question who and where similarity with Egyptian hieroglyphs can also be an indication of mutual influence or a common more primitive source (from the time of Noah or even earlier). On the basis of the data currently available it cannot be excluded that the old Semitic script is older and has quite another source.

• The pictographic character of the symbols, and the fact that they were often written in an arbitrary orientation and s an alphabet script. A lot of scholars have never even considered the idea that old Semitic letters represent an original notion, i.e. have meaning, and that one could reconstruct those meanings of the letters by objective scientific methods. They assume the letters are part of an alphabet script and as such are signs representing a sound, and without intrinsic meaning. However, this unscientific view ignores a few important factors: (1) there is no solid ground to reject the hypothesis that in its ear an alphabet but a highly pictographic/ideographic script – the pictures witness most clearly about this, (2) the involvement of God in the emerging of this script and in the earliest origin of the basic underlying structure of Proto-Semitic and Hebrew language; (3) finding a collection of all symbols at one object (pot shard, stone, rock, etc.) is no proof that this would be an abecedary, and that therefore the script must have been an alphabet script (what is sometimes seen as an abecedary may even be a famous story just as well, as I show in another appendix).

Though we have no certainty here (none of us were there, so all that anyone says about that era is a form of speculation189), I do not rule out a possible pictographic/ideographic origin of the script, associated with the earliest roots of the proto-Semitic language. So I start from that hypothesis (till the evidence might prove otherwise). As said: the shape of the old Semitic signs seems to confirm this. That means in the fragments found, consecutive words in sentences often were not delimited, also seems to confirm this. It can be tested quite simply whether older and simple Biblical Hebrew words and phrases allow themselves to be read in this script as combinations of the individual pictures, and so not only as combination of the letter-sounds that maybe later got associated to the pictures. The hundreds of words and dozens of names I have been able to reconstruct so far offer a lot of perspective. (See Table 2 and Table 3, where I present a number of those simple, in particular older words and names with a possible reconstruction of their meaning, from the constituting old Semitic signs.)

• Of the Paleo-Hebrew script it can be observed clearly that it developed around 1000 BC gradually from the old Semitic script. It is remarkable that till about 100 BC, in many books of the Bible and other Biblical writings (even in the Greek Septuagint) the Name of God that was considered). Apparently, this was then considered holy was still written in Paleo-Hebrew script (i.e. as: as more authentic and worthy for the wonderful Name of God. To me, this is an additional indication, that Paleo-Hebrew, and, for the older books of the Bible, the old Semitic script was very likely the script in which a large part of the OT was written originally.

• It is most fitting to the character and the way of acting of the God of the Bible that He made His Torah and a lot of other Bible-books initially available to the people in a script that was most easy to read, as is the case with a pictographically readable script.

• The Bible appears to give many clues to the explanation of the old Semitic symbols. When for a moment we start from the hypothesis that the old Semitic once in origin could have been a pictographic script, it appear phrases, and words from the other Semitic languages, can be used very well to help reconstruct and ascertain the precise original notions depicted by the old Semitic symbols, by looking at the symbols that once constituted these words. The connotations found in some old Semitic symbols and the words formed with them, appear to correspond extremely well with things the Bible teaches more explicitly (see e.g. what I wrote about the word ‘light’ as our first connection to God, and how Jesus and John speak about ‘walking in the light’ as walking, closely connected to God).

The other way around it also appears that knowledge of the old Semitic symbols – the script in which the first parts of the Bible were most likely written – helps in our understanding of the Bible and in our wonder about the greatness of the God of the Bible. I hope to clarify that to you via this document.

I conclude firstly and most importantly that our understanding of the Bible and some knowledge of the old Semitic script can benefit a lot of each other mutually. So, that’s why I suggested digging a bit further into it in the first place.

We are – of course – obliged to let our speculations about that long ago era align as much as possible with what we still can observe of it, as via archeology and the remarkable letter signs that we find.

Appendix 6. The notions and the associated sounds show similarities with those from old Sumerian

In the beginning of this document I suggested that there are similarities to be observed between the old Semitic notions and the associated symbols and sounds, and the Proto-Sumerian notions and sounds (related to what has been named ‘articulatory symbolism’ in Proto-Sumerian). John A. Halloran gives in ‘The Proto-Sumerian Language Invention Process’ a list of sounds with associated notions in Proto-Sumerian (with a more extensive discussion of each than in the brief citation below).

In the table below I couple these with the Semitic symbols and their notions (especially the ProtoSumerian notions with here):

In ‘Sumero-Indo-European Language Contacts’ Aleksi Sahala of the University of Helsinki gives a number of Sumerian words that seem to have relatives in Proto-Indo-European (PIE) and other languages. What strikes me, is that a number of these can well be read concerning their meaning, after transliteration into the old Semitic symbols. Some examples:

• Sumerian bur(u(d)x) = breach, gap, hole; and PIE bher(edh) = to cut, breach. Old Semitic:
to enter (forcefully) the house (originally of reed or earth!) of the other (with an arrow or spear) (derived: Latin forāre – pierce, bore through, NL.: boren, Old Norwegian: bora, Finnish: pora – to drill a hole).

- to

• Sumerian gan(a) = PIE ǵenh1 = to be pregnant, to let be born, to give life to. Old Semitic:

carry seed/offspring or to put offspring on their own feet and let them live, or with ghayin:

- to enclose seed or offspring with joy (derived: Hittite: genzu, Latin genus, gignere, Gotic:

kuni). This also sheds light on a possible etymology of Greek gyne – woman (though Sahala relates that to the Sumerian géme; both can also have a common origin!). In old Greek: ΓYNE, possibly derived from:

or

- carrying or enclosing the (male) pin and the seed/ the offspring with joy.

- feet / transport

• Sumerian girgir(2)(a) = (battle)wagon. PIE kwekwlo- = wheel. Old Semitic:

for a higher other, almost synonymous to

- transport for a leader, according my

English: cycle, Latvian: kāklas, Syrian: gegil - wheel).

• The Dutch word koe (kuh; German: Kuh, English: cow), is still almost equal to the Sumerian gud = cow, cattle; and the PIE gwous = cow, ox (Sanskrit go). Noting all of these forms, I arrive at the old

Semitic transliteration:

- feet to let a sharp stick enter (e.g. into the ground). The first domesticated oxen were used a.o. to plow the land, that is: to pull a sharp stick through the earth

(compare Hebrew ג·ו·ב - gub – to plow; the wild variant of the ox attacked by letting its horns – sharp sticks – enter into anything; cf. Hebrew ג·ו·ד - gud – to attack). Remarkably, the two most essential elements, the feet (g/k sound) and the sharp stick (letter u or w; u-sound) have been rather persistent in the further development in the last 4000 years (this seems to affirm a theory as that of ‘articulatory symbolism’).

Appendix 7. Language interpretation, archeology and culture study:

the example of the turning door

Our language is strongly influenced by the objects and activities that we encounter in daily life. In ancient times that activities from that era, especially those that one encountered a lot or that one revered. So, fundamental study of lang Doors are a typical example of this. Doors have not existed forever; ancient villages have been excavated where the hous house; especially when you were not home. One time, a door that can be simply opened and closed repeatedly was a special invention. The doors employed in the ancient Near East, had a specific construction. They did not have a hinge on the side, as present doors mostly have, but they existed of a board attached to a large pole. This pole stood in a sturdy hole in the ground, in which it could turn. For this purpose, in the durable variant a hole was made in a hard stone, that was build into the floor. The observation that this pole stood in the ground, made that the symbol of the - wav, representative of a tentpin, vine, etc., was used for it.

A number of Semitic words and notions refer to this. An example is the verb

- wada‘ (later in Hebrew: ידע - jada‘) – to have knowledge, literally: to see the pin of the door. (Or bodily: to see the pin and the opening/entrance, a euphemism for intercourse.)

In the old pictographs for a door and its variants, as shown earlier here – that pin is clearly visible (below, right); in the Samaritan script and some other variants of the Paleo-Hebrew it was even bigger/clearer: 𐤃. In the Greek Delta - Δ – it was invisible, but in our D it is somewhat visible again.

The word דלֶת - delet – door is originally:

- stick-construction.1

-a

- door, entrance, board or ‘moving, flat thing’

In the word

- wachad (later in Hebrew: אחד - ’echad when it is about God, and יחד - yachad when people are the subject) that pin is central: the pin ( ) of the board ( ) of the door ( ), or the pin ( ) between wall ( ) and door ( ). That pin provided a stable connection, even with the turning of the door. It provided unity, while allowing the door some freedom of movement. This is characteristic for this Semitic and Biblical notion of being one.

The pin ended below in a round hole in a hard stone (basalt, granite and especially diorite were used a lot, for a long lifespan). How is such a hole formed in such a hard stone? In nature hard stones with a hole in them are rare, though they do appear (it is a volcanic stone). In the thinking from the early days only the hand of God could press such a hole in such a hard stone. So, such a stone was called: to press - hand - higher Other; in pictures:

- יָרַ֫

The hole in that stone is worth mentioning as well. It was literally the opening in which the pin ended; A couple of doorpin-hole-stones – possibly of a pictographic:

the Dutch word ‘put’ (pit) is connected to this. That many more photo’s at the Penn Museum seems certainly the case with our word ‘pot’ (jar). Train constructors still speak (in Dutch) about an ‘aspot’ (axle pot) as the metal ‘pot’ in which each end of an axle (Dutch: as) of a train or railway coach turn. Technical terms often had a very long life…

However, the old

- פוּת - pot was at the time also als used euphemistically for the female vagina (Isaiah 3: 17), because that, too was seen as an ‘opening in which a pin ended’. In Dutch this word is still used this way (and by extension for a lesbian woman).

With big doors, at the topside such a hollow stone was used as well, later on all doors. This required a very sturdy doorpost. In the beginning a palm tree was used for this, or a pillar, that looked like it

Some literature

In compiling this document I used a large variety of information on the history of the Semitic languages. In the last de clear yet have induced a lot of theories. The way I deal with this is that I look for a kind of dependable common denominator that does justice to the starting-points described in one of the appendices, in particular to the Bible narrative.

I especially based my work on analysis of the old Semitic script texts themselves: photographs and other pictures of text fragments found at archeological excavation and accurate information on those, which fortunately can be found more and more on the Internet: at the websites I will mention further on, and websites of universities and museums, and of some archeologists, like:

In the main text and in the footnotes of this document I have mentioned several other sources.

Next to the above I found a lot of materials containing some unique information but needing heavy sifting to find the grains amidst the chaff, as e.g.:

• The Ancient Hebrew Research Center (see a.o. www.ancient-hebrew.org/docs/28_chart.pdf). One of the first extensive sources that I encountered (with video lectures on YouTube also), it inspired me to search further. Its director, Jeff Benner, surely did some groundbreaking work. Unfortunately, some of the information appeared somewhat influenced by Jewish mysticism; therefore I view it somewhat critical. Sometimes they go too far in an effort to reduce everything into a system of two-letter roots. Their (former?) explanation of some symbols – the samekh/sin, tsade, qoph and shin – did not match my factual observations.

• Hubert Grimme, Althebräische Inschriften vom Sinai – Alphabet, Textliches, Sprachliches mit Folgerungen, Orient-Buchha original inscriptions. Otherwise seriously (out)dated; saw the old Semitic script as developed from the Hieratic script, to which all observations were adapted. Some most surprising (read: fancy) chapters, a.o. on discovering a glimpse of what could have been Moses before his 40th year in the midst of the Sinai excavations.

• René Victorien Lottin de Laval, Voyage dans la Péninsule arabique du Sinaï et l'Égypte moyenne, Gide, 1859.

• Charles Forster, Sinai photographed, R. Bentley, Londen, 1862. Linguistically seen qualitatively very dubious and dated.

Interesting is also the relationship of the Semitic languages with the Proto-Indo-European and other primal languages and language groups and a possible single Proto-Human language that stood at the basis of all these language groups. People like Isaac E. Mozeson (see e.g. The Word: The Dictionary That Reveals the Hebrew Source of English, SP Books, 2002) have been heavily criticized by linguists in the past because their ideas about a common origin of all languages were considered too unorthodox and because their ‘explanations’ were at times somewhat simplistic, suffering scientific accuracy. However, recently also in linguistic circles the idea has arisen that perhaps there once was one ProtoHuman language aft

• V. Orel (Jerusalem), ‘Hamito-Semitic, Sino-Caucasian, Nostratic’, concept-article (pre-publication at www.nostratic.net, 2012).

In this current article the writer demonstrates convincingly that Hamito-Semitic, Sino-Caucasian and Nostratic (the ancestor of Indo-European); three big groups of world languages from long ago, must have had a common root.

(See also the web-article: ‘The Hebrew-Celtic connection’ (also here), showing that Celtic – mostly seen as part of the Indo-European language group – probably derives from Phoenician. Indirectly, this also lays a link of influence by the Semitic language group towards the Indo-European language group).
